THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS

OF

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

The work which is here offered to the public is a collection of documents various in their nature both as to subject and antiquity. The period of time which they cover is little less than three hundred years.

In the first place some account shall here be given of the MSS. from which the following pages are derived.

Mode of reference to MSS.

It will be found that throughout the work reference is given on the margin of the pages, in the case of almost every separate article, to the MS. and folios of the MS. from which such article is transcribed. Thus the letters A., B., C., D., F., CC., Aaa., Aa. indicate several MS. volumes so marked on their cover, and referred to in other works, as well as in this, by those letters. Of each of them a short description shall be attempted.

Description of the chancellor's book.

Of these MSS. A. is by far the most important. It is a small quarto volume bound in leather and consisting of about one hundred leaves.[1] The writing is of various periods, the oldest in the volume not being earlier than the year 1350. The greater portion is of considerably later date: the various articles are, however, by various hands and cannot be with certainty referred to any exact date, except when such date happens to be given in the article itself. The several antiquaries, who have handled the volume, do not seem to agree as to its antiquity; for on the first leaf is written, "Liber Vice Canc. Oxon scriptus manu originali de anno Domini 1375, ut liquet p. 13, Edwardi III. 49°." Another hand adds, "Yet see things written here in "hands ancienter than that time on pp. 7, 28, 47, "65, 68, 91, 209, 75, 80." And a third writes below, "Hæc dicta sunt ex sententia clarissimi antiquarii "Briani Twyni S. T. B. cujus nota hæc est, licet minus "probabilis et cui fides haud facile adhibenda." These three notes were written, it would seem by the character of their hand, by Antony Wood, Bryan Twyne, and William Smith, of whom the two latter were keepers of the archives of the University, and the last especially to be trusted.

Its probable age,

In assigning, therefore, the date 1350 as that of the most ancient MS. we shall not, probably, understate its antiquity.

This MS. volume is commonly known as the Chancellor's or Commissary's book, the title of "Vice "Chancellor" not occurring earlier than the year 1450 or thereabouts. It is, though not of great antiquity, truly a venerable and curious volume, written in and handled by the successive chancellors and their commissaries, consulted on every emergency, referred to in every difficulty, accepted as a final authority in every disputed case which arose for centuries. How many illustrious men have pored over it, in how many scenes of interest has it not borne a part, in how many rooms of long defunct and scarce remembered halls has it not been treasured! And yet it is in no sense to be regarded as an original, as will be seen when its contents are further described. On opening the volume the first document we find is one of the year 1575, being an "Inspeximus" of Queen Elizabeth. This, of course has been omitted in the following work, along with all other articles of later date than the period of time embraced in the scheme of this series: next follows an indenture between the University and the town, of the year 1458, which will be found in its proper place in this volume: then follows the calendar, which is of not a later date than 1420, and probably it is earlier than that time: it is terribly damaged by erasures and blots throughout, so much so indeed that without the assistance afforded by the other calendars in B. & C. it would not have been possible to reproduce it as has been done in this work: at the top of the calendar for each month is a Latin doggrel rhyme, which is however so far obliterated that it is beyond recovery and has been therefore omitted in this work. Immediately following the calendar is a very rude illuminated picture of the Crucifixion, the full size of the page, the legend below which has been carefully erased. It is indeed evident that the whole volume has been most shamefully maltreated at some period posterior to the Reformation: in all instances where the name of the Blessed Virgin Mary occurs, that name has been erased or obliterated, along with other expressions[1] which offended the mind of those into whose hands the MS. had then fallen. This alone would have defaced it considerably, but this is only a small part of the damage that it has sustained. In many parts of the volume a whole folio is obliterated, and very much more frequently a whole statute or other article. This has been done probably from various reasons; sometimes, no doubt, because the particular statute in question had been superseded; sometimes, there is too much reason to think, because its provisions[2] were not acceptable to the possessor of the book for the time being; but the majority of the obliterations have in all probability been caused by treating the pages too freely with galls, which rendered the faded portions legible for the time, but shortly after

left them almost black. This sad destruction appears to have been effected in Archbishop Laud's time, when the whole statute book was revised and the old book transcribed for reference.

Late transcript of, in the Bodleian Library.

The transcript of A. then made still exists in the Bodleian Library, it is marked E., and has been constantly referred to by the editor, but in no case used as an authority.

The passages obliterated, as described, have been scrutinized with the greatest care, and, by here and there traeing the outlines of the letters and comparing the result with the MSS. B. and C., most of the destroyed portions have, it is hoped, been once more brought to light; some, however, are undoubtedly lost irretrievably, and a short time more would have sufficed to render illegible much that has now been preserved.

Following the calendar are some notes apparently for its use; these will be found in Part II., of this work [pp. 370–373]. Next in order in the MS. come several charters by "inspeximus" of successive sovereigns, and with them, and also scattered here and there throughout the volume, a number of patent letters of the several sovereigns addressed to the University. Of these charters and patent letters no notice has been taken in preparing the present work, excepting a few given in the Appendix, which, it is thought, have not yet been printed, and which are not mentioned, unless the editor has overlooked them by accident, in the catalogue published a few years ago by the University Commissioners. The bulk of the articles in A., which are printed in the present work occur in the middle of the MS. volume; they are followed in the MS. by several Papal bulls, which, as being accessible elsewhere, have also been omitted here; by a list of the Chancellors of the University, of rather late date, and of no authority, except so far as corroborated from other sources; by a few scattered notes as to assize of measures, &c., and price of wheat; and, lastly, by a collection of comparatively modern statutes—of the years 1564–5, according to Bryan Twyne's opinion—which have been added to the volume, and bound up with it on the occasion of its last binding, as it would seem. The "inspeximus" by Queen Elizabeth, which stands at the commencement of the MS., as stated above, was evidently there placed at the same time. The original binding of the volume was, it is known, far more costly than the present, and ornamented with a silver clasp. The book was solemnly delivered to each succeeding Chancellor on his election, along with the other insignia (see p. 284), and by him similarly surrendered at the expiration of his term of office.

The Southern Proctor's book.

Next in order is the MS. marked B., known as the Senior or Southern Proctor's book. This is a larger volume than A., but contains almost exactly the same matter, with, however, some additions and some omissions. Almost the exact date of this MS. is known; for the expenses of the production of the volume are to be found in the Archives of the University, where the following particulars, under the year 1477, occur.

Item, pro scriptura et materia Libri Procuratoris - -	3	17	4

Item, pro laboribus scriptoris pro perquisitione copiæ ejusdem libri, ut placet judicibus -	0	3	4
	7	8	10

It must be admitted that the Proctor and Masters who superintended the work were exorbitantly remunerated, for a MS. more full of blunders, both clerical and grammatical, can hardly be found.

The binding here spoken of has long been lost, as also have the clasps, and at present the volume is heavily bound in rough calf.

The Northern Proctor's book,

The third is MS. C., known as the junior or Northern Proctor's book. This is similar in appearance to the preceding, but of considerably earlier date, and has, of course, like B., been rebound at a comparatively recent time. It was caused to be written by Richard Fleming, afterwards Prebendary of York, and later, Bishop of Lincoln, during his proctorship in the year 1407. (See p. 237.)

It is hardly too much to say that without the assistance afforded by collating this MS. with the two above-mentioned, the work now offered to the public, could with difficulty have been completed. In C. there is some attempt at arrangement, as will be seen by the account given of its contents in the introduction to it, which will be found in its proper chronological place in this volume (pp. 237–9). Perhaps it would be more correct, or at least would give the reader a better idea of the MS., to say that some arrangement was originally attempted both in this and in A. and B.; but that in C. the order has been less interfered with by insertion of new matter after the original writing was completed, or by erasure of older matter and introduction of new folios.

Superiority of to the other two.

The present state of all these MSS. is a perfect mass of confusion; statutes relating to one faculty mixed up with those of another, without any regard to order or facility of reference.

Re-arrangement of contents of the MSS.

It will, perhaps, be asked why the preface to C. (p. 237), was not prefixed to this work or to C. itself. The answer is that, so far as practicable, it has been the editor's aim to arrange the contents of A., B., and

C. chronologically. The three MSS. are in fact one work, or rather three copies of one work. The main interest attaching to their contents is to be derived from the time at which they were respectively written. It is greatly to be regretted that so little certainty is attainable as to the real date of a large proportion of the contents. The aim, however, of the present work has been to arrange the several statutes in order of time. This has been attempted by taking those, which have dates contained either in their preamble or at their conclusion, and using them as examples by which to judge of the date of the others. This will be thought not a very sure guide, and it is readily admitted that it is not, but more accuracy was attainable, it is hoped, by this plan than may be supposed. For, as we have already noticed, the statutes in A. are written in various hands, and these of very distinct character in many cases. Here, therefore, there has often been found a tolerably fair ground for assuming the contemporaneity of other statutes without date which appear in the same hand.

Other criteria have been also used in endeavouring to approximate to the real dates, indications which would probably seem trifling to the ordinary reader, but which have a real value in the eye of one who studies the same MSS. for months or even years; gradually one acquires a power of discerning objects where at first all seemed impenetrable night; traces of agreement and resemblance become more and more distinct by comparison, and parts, which at first appeared utterly incongruous, bear marks which fairly entitle them to be considered as a whole.

The editor is, however, as conscious at least as any of his readers can be that probably very many errors are to be found in his attempt at chronological arrangement. He is not the first who has attempted to arrange the matter of these MSS. One such attempt in MS. [E.] has already been alluded to, which still exists in the Bodleian Library; of its value as a guide to chronology of the statutes there can be but one opinion, it is wholly useless; in fact, such an arrangement does not appear to have been attempted, but given up in despair. Another such attempt, if such it can be called, was made on the occasion of the late commission, and two or three copies of the result were printed; one was lent to the editor by the present Bishop of Peterborough. The three MSS. hitherto noticed form a collection of themselves, and are preserved among the archives of the University. They were originally, as has been stated, the property of the chancellor and proctors for the time being; but, when their contents (practically if not legally) were superseded, as was presumed, by the Laudian code, they ceased to be used, except occasionally for reference, and have long become rather literary curiosities than books of practical use. They form the basis of the present work.

Other MSS. used in this work.

Next we proceed to mention the other MSS. which have been used. Of these the first is that known as D. It is a smaller volume than any of the preceding, consisting of about one hundred leaves of parchment, thickly bound in wood covered with leather, and with brazen clasps. This MS. is not a portion of the University archives properly so called, being now in the Bodleian Library, and accessible to ordinary readers there. It appears to be simply another proctor's book, by whom written, or when, there is nothing to show, except its appearance; from this it would appear to be of about the same date as C. It is a singularly careless performance, written in one uniform hand throughout, with few and poor illuminations; the words are unusually abbreviated and difficult to decipher; there is no attempt whatever at arrangement, but a rude index is given at the end. The contents are for the most part the same with those of A., B., and C. but with some additions, and they of a very interesting nature; these will be identified by the reader by the reference being made, to D. only, on the margin.

C.C. is a MS. volume of the latter end of the fifteenth century, somewhat similar in general appearance, and also in contents, to A., B., and C.; but it contains somewhat less matter than any of those three MSS., and not nearly so much as the three collectively. It is in very good condition and very legibly written, but full of clerical errors. It would appear that this MS. and D. have been transcribed by or for some chancellor or proctor and kept for their private use, and have thus found their way into private collections; and thence to the public libraries. D. being now, as above stated, in the Bodleian Library, and C.C. in the British Museum. [Claudius D. 8. Cott. MSS.] C.C. is of the same nature, and contains similar matter.

This is the last of the MSS. which the editor has been able to discover, of the "Chancellor's and Proctor's "books." It is the least valuable of them all, and has not been collated throughout, as the other four MSS. have been, in the preparation of these volumes.

It remains now to notice the other MSS. here used. These are marked and generally known as F., Aaa., and Aa., and may be described as register books of the University. The first [F.] is a thick volume of parchment bound in leather with brazen clasps, and contains, interspersed with other matter, a series of letters from and to the University, all of the fifteenth century. It is written throughout apparently by the same hand, at least by far the larger proportion would seem to be so; nearly the whole is much faded, full of abbreviations, and very difficult to decipher. The letters, &c. are nearly five hundred in number, many of them very curious. The volume also contains the two catalogues of books given by Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester, to the University; and the annual entries of payment of money to the University by the Abbeys of Eynsham and Oseneye. A large number of the letters are "letters testimonial" of the University granted to Farley's Register, a volume of letters. Description of the MS.

various members and recommending them to bishops and other magnates. This register was transcribed from the original letters, presumed to be destroyed when the register was made, by Farley, the scribe of the University at the time. It has only been used in the present work for the purpose of publishing the Catalogues of Duke Humfrey's books, which will accordingly be found in Part II. of this volume. The editor has, however, read and catalogued almost the whole, with a view to an extension of the work now edited, at a future period. The letters are principally in Latin, though here and there occurs one in English.

Acts of the Chancellor's Court.

The MS. Aaa. next requires notice. This is a volume of similar size to the others, but containing a much larger amount of matter; it has about two hundred and eighty folios, closely written, and consists of the proceedings in the Chancellor's Court from the year 1434 to the year 1469, except the years 1440–1441. The whole is written on paper, without any attempt at ornament or illumination, and in the most slovenly manner possible. The proceedings at each sitting of the court are entered by the Chancellor, or his commissary for the time, in his own handwriting, hence the volume is curious as a repertory of autographs of that period. Some of the hands are well known, as that of Dr. Gascoigne; which presents a singularly bold and irregular appearance. In this MS., as also in all, (but less so in F. than in the others) the folios have more than one pagination. The loss of some folios has rendered a fresh set of figures necessary. This produces not a little confusion in referring to the originals. To the editor this MS. has proved the most interesting by far, and he only regrets that he has not been able to publish the whole in the present series. Several specimens, however, of each species of matter entered in the register have been given in this work, and pains have been taken to select those which seemed to present the greatest features of general interest. A great deal will here be found illustrative of the actual private life of the members of the University at the time; for instance we are here able to see, enumerated with perfect distinctness, the articles of furniture which were contained in the camera or "rooms"[1] of a scholar of the fifteenth century; his books, his dress, not seldom his debts, his quarrels, amusements, &c. will be incidently sketched or detailed. Several wills are also given, not because wills of that period are in themselves a rarity, for the editor is well aware that good specimens have already been published; but he believes that not a little will be found in those printed in the present volumes which will bring to light facts, certainly not generally known, as to the state of the Universities; curious details about sickness, expenses, books, debts, funerals, exhibitions to poor scholars and servants for their maintenance at the University, with a variety of other matter, which will be noticed, as we proceed, more in detail.

Aa. is a similar but smaller volume, also written on paper. It is much damaged and often utterly illegible, torn, faded, and stained. It is a register of the Convocation of the University, and is chiefly, therefore, composed of the various graces granted therein. A few of the more curious of them, either as containing information relating to studies requisite, or conditions upon which the grace was granted, have been selected for the present purpose. The date of this volume is the same, or nearly so, as that of Aaa. Register of Convocation.

Here then the list of original MSS. made use of is complete.

As it is commonly supposed that there are a great number of MS. volumes, relating to the University, in its possession, it may be as well perhaps to correct or at least to modify that impression. There are, the The materials for an extension of this work existing.

[1] More properly "room;" in those times a several sleeping apartment was certainly the greatest amount of indulgence.

editor believes, no MS. volumes in "the archives" of the University older than those transcribed and collated here; and those here used are all that exist down to that date, after which there follows a regular succession of registers.

There is, of course, a vast quantity of deeds of various kinds, though, it is believed, none are very ancient, not more so than the beginning of the thirteenth or end of the twelfth century; but of this the editor cannot speak with certainty, at least not from personal examination.

Thus, no register, with the exception of those here used, and no collection of letters, is to be found until the fifteenth century. Whether any such MSS. ever existed, and, if so, what has become of them, is not perhaps altogether a futile inquiry; probably they perished from having been originally written on loose sheets and never being gathered into a volume; for we find that in the case of the statutes it was provided that the proctors should, under a penalty, enter in A., B., and C. the several statutes as they were passed, within fifteen days from their passing (p. 253). We several times also find notices of "quaterni" or sheets, on which registers were kept (p. 285), and of the "liber ruber" (p. 486). However, the lapse of time itself will sufficiently account for the loss, and the editor mentions the subject here in the hope only that inquiry may be stimulated, believing as he does, that it is possible that considerable portions of such registers may yet exist in the form of loose sheets in private collections.

Registers prior to fifteenth century lost.

The loss most to be deplored, however, is that of all trace of any MSS. belonging to the numerous halls; and yet each must have possessed, and we know did possess its own registers, and, no doubt, its "acta," &c. What a mass of information as to the detail of University life, or even of mediæval life generally, would have been here afforded! It seems well nigh impossible that, even putting the halls at the modest number of one hundred, so large a quantity of MSS. as must have existed should have utterly perished: one would suppose that the families of the various principals or the colleges[1] into whose possession the buildings passed, would have retained the papers of the last principal of each hall as it was in its turn swallowed up in the advancing tide of the colleges, which, as they were successively endowed and gradually extended, enclosed within their limits the sites of by far the larger portion of the old halls. Hitherto, however, no such memorials of the halls have been met with.

MSS. relating to the halls.

The present would seem to be no improper place for the mention of other MSS. in connexion with the subject, of which no use has been made by the editor of the present volume, and from which it is possible that matter hitherto unpublished may be derived.

Other possible sources unexplored.

And first, to speak of what may still remain at Oxford unexplored, it is possible that in the Bodleian Library something may still be found, more likely, however, in the several colleges, stored in the muniment rooms and never seen, or effectually concealed by being bound up with other loose sheets, papers may yet remain which would repay the labour of the antiquary. The editor, however, believes that the resources of the University in this respect are very considerably overrated by those who have had no experience in such investigations; he has himself found little or nothing of value in the places indicated, and is inclined to think that if there are any important original MSS. relating to mediæval Oxford, which have not hitherto been published, besides those now edited, or mentioned

[1] That the muniments of one hall, called "Le Bedylhall," passed into the possession of Queen's College we know from a note in MSS. Aa., fol. 73. There was also in the School's tower a MS. called by B. Twyne visitationes aularum cum articulis; which has now been missing since 1818. These are specimens of a large class of MSS.

in the foregoing remarks, they are to be found elsewhere and not at Oxford.

The collections of Hare and

Of Transcript MSS. there are several at Oxford, which, or at least parts of which, ought to be published. In the first place there is Hare's collection of the liberties and privileges of the University. This contains all the royal letters and charters up to the collector's time; no complete printed copy of these exists. The most voluminous and most valuable, however, are the collections of Brian Twyne; considering the early age at which this laborious antiquary died, it is truly amazing that he should have been able to write so vast a quantity, collected too, as a great deal of it is, from distant places. His MSS. consist of ten thick quarto volumes; the materials are collected from all sources, and there is no doubt they were the real authorities of Antony Wood's History. They are mentioned here principally because they contain extracts from the registers of the Bishop of Lincoln and the Archbishop of Canterbury, and from other episcopal registers, the publication of which, or such portions of them as relate to the Universities, would very likely prove to be a valuable addition to our present knowledge; at least they would be originals.

Besides these, there is in the School's tower, or was, a smaller quarto MS. volume written by a Mr. Winsor, but it is only a modern production and of no sort of historical value, and is only mentioned here lest it should be supposed that it had been overlooked.

In the British Museum there are two MS. volumes containing matter relating to our subject: Vitellius E. 10. Cott. has a number of letters of Gilbert Stone and of the University. Faustina C. 7. Cott. is a transcript of several ancient documents, and a number of original letters of the fifteenth century. Whatever in these two volumes is worth printing will more properly be placed along with the letters in F. if that MS. should ever be edited.

The city archives.

There is no doubt that at one time there were also in the possession of the city of Oxford materials highly valuable as illustrative of the history of the University; but the more important of them have perished. The authorities of the city, with great civility and liberality, allowed the editor to inspect their archives, but there did not appear to be anything original of any value for the present work. One MS. volume, "Liber ruber minor," was, it is said, borrowed by Bryan Twyne, and never restored to the city authorities; whether this be the case or not, at any rate the MS., which was a valuable one, is not known to exist now.

Foreign Universities, &c.

At Rome, and at Paris, and at some other foreign universities, it is not improbable that some additional materials might be found, though it is more likely that the archives of the University of Paris would be found to contain little more of any interest relating to Oxford than the names of masters who had migrated from the one university to the other, as they will similarly be found recorded in the registers of Convocation at Oxford, of which a specimen or two are given in Part II. At Rome it is on the contrary highly probable that there exist, along with other interesting details, accounts of the various processes of appeal, &c. which were so often carried from Oxford to the Papal see.

Between Oxford and other foreign universities, during the fifteenth century (and of the 14th and 13th centuries Oxford possesses no records beyond those here edited) the communication was not so great or frequent, or the migration of masters so common, as at an earlier time it is asserted to have been.

Before dismissing the subject of MSS. it should be stated that although the statutes in Part I. of this volume are, as observed already, arranged chronologically to the best of the editor's power, this plan has not been adopted with respect to that portion of A., B., and C., which will be found in Part II. The reason of this is simply that the attempt proved to be in vain; no clue of any importance could be found such as to render their chronological order possible. Moreover, it is the opinion of the editor that a considerable portion of these statutes are far older than anything else relating to the University at present existing in MSS., or indeed existing at all; such as, for instance, those on pp. 443–5. "Antiquæ ordinationes pro Magistris "in Grammatica, sed non sunt in moderno usu."

Since, therefore, it seemed hopeless to arrange these statutes chronologically, recourse has been had to the plan originally followed by the register writers of A., B., and C., i.e., the matter has been arranged in the order of the various faculties so far as it relates specially to any of them. The residue, fortunately not a great quantity, has been necessarily left in its own confusion at the end, pp. 446 to 494.

Having given an account of the various MSS. from which the following pages are transcribed, it remains that the general scope and plan of the work should be noticed, and then a brief description of its contents given.

This work is not a history of the University.

First, the reader is requested to expect to find no more than can be furnished in a work forming a portion of such a series as the present. The editor believes this caution to be needed, because more than one inquiry has been addressed to him respecting the "History "of the University" which he is preparing. No history of the University will be found here; however much in accordance with his own tastes the undertaking of such a work would have been, it could find no place in a series of original MSS. intended as sources of information to other writers rather than popular histories for ordinary readers. The history of the University of Oxford has yet to be written, and it is in the hope of contributing something to the attainment of this object that the present volume has been undertaken.

The histories of the University that have hitherto appeared are really of very little service as histories. The "History and Antiquities" of Antony Wood is, it is true, a wonderful repertory of antiquarian knowledge, and, in the main, reliable from the reign of Henry III. onwards. The other histories, if so they can be called, which have been written by English authors are almost valueless. The best known is that of Dr. Ayliffe, of which it is hardly too much to say that it is literally full of the grossest blunders, and, though probably unintentionally, impostures. If the writer were to state his own opinion as to which is the most reliable history of the University of Oxford that has yet appeared, it would be that it is that of Hüber. It is truly surprising that a foreigner has so completely seized and comprehended the national position, and internal working of the University. He has produced a book at once readable and, as far as it goes, accurate, based on a sound critical view of antiquity and comparative research. And yet, though this is high praise, the reader of that work will find much to desiderate. As the history of Antony Wood is rather an antiquarian compendium than a history, so is Hüber's on the other hand, rather a popular and readable history than such an union of antiquarian research and historical construction such as alone could satisfy the want. The history of the University has, we repeat, yet to be written; when a person can be found, with leisure at his command and tastes leading him in that direction, completely to explore the archives both of the University and the several colleges, the registers of Lambeth and Lincoln, and other sources already above indicated, such a work can be produced. More materials than we at present possess might in this way be made available, and discoveries might be made at present unsuspected.

The plan of the present work.

The work at present offered has undergone considerable modification as to its scope since it was in the first instance conceived. The editor's original plan was to collect from all sources such hitherto unpublished documents as would illustrate academical life and studies from the reign of Henry III. to that of Henry VIII., but, upon commencing an examination of the materials existing for the compiling of such a collection, it appeared to him that nothing could be found more valuable in this way than the manuscripts which are here printed. They may be described as consisting, with few exceptions, of two distinct parts; first, the old statute books; and second, the application of those statutes, and their operation exhibited in detail. Thus, while the first named part shows what the provisions and requirements of the University were, the second, at least to some extent, displays the inner and individual life of its members. Whatever other matters are included in the work are supposed to be subsidiary to these two main subjects.

It consists of two parts.

The reason for its limits.

And here it will not improbably be asked why the period embraced in this work should be commenced with the reign of Henry III.[1] The answer will, it is hoped, be sufficiently stated in the short historical summary with which it seems almost necessary to introduce what will follow.

Sketch of the early history of Oxford,

That Oxford was early a place of some considerable importance seems probably true, though it is to be noted that it is not mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle earlier than the commencement of the ninth century. The city, not the University, is now spoken of. As to the name Oxford, it has been suggested that it is not, as usually supposed, derived from ox and ford, because the analogy of the name Oseneye would point to the origin of the name from ose or ouse and ford.

This theory is not without merits, but it seems most likely after all that the old derivation is the right one, and that it is more likely that osen-eye, is itself a corruption of oxen-eye, when we compare with it the name of the neighbouring villages of Hengs-eye (now Hincksey), (see page 516). Thus Oxen-eye and Hengs-eye would be the island of the ox and the horse respectively, and Oxenford is probably one of the same family of names. With the history, however, of the city we have here nothing to do, except so far as it is connected with the University. Of the origin of the University absolutely nothing is known, some maintaining that it gave rise to the town, others that the town preceded the University. The whole dispute speedily takes us back into the region of utter fables, only comparable with those of "Jack the Giant Killer" and "King Arthur and his Knights." Those who wish to see what has been dared in the way of fable, as to the antiquity of Oxford, can see it in the pages of Antony Wood and Bryan Twyne. The fact is, that the history of the University is a miniature of the history of a nation, and is not exempt from the general laws of all history; it begins in myth, it has its heroic age, its really historical, and its modern periods. Of the mythical period, if it can be seriously named at all, it can only be, of course, to regret the folly which seems to have infatuated a man otherwise sensible, as Antony Wood was, and led him to invent or repeat the myth of Memprick (a thousand years before the incarnation of Christ), King of the Britains, and of Brute the Trojan, and other like absurdities. Whether the study of antiquity really led him on till he partly believed what he wished to be true (for it undoubtedly has this effect on some minds, while in others it produces an almost equally irrational scepticism);

The fabulous accounts of A. Wood and Bryan Twyne.

or whether he intended the whole of that portion of his work as a ponderous joke is perhaps hardly worth inquiring. It may suffice to have thus noticed it, and to further observe that the references to authors and MSS. at the foot of the pages of that part of his work will be found instructive to those who choose to refer to the originals for themselves, as showing how large a theory can be formed from very slender facts. Even that, which has been called above the heroic period, is scarcely more trustworthy; but here we do come to at least real persons, Alfred and Grymbald, and the rest, though acts are ascribed to them which we may safely affirm they never performed. It is not until we get much further down the stream of time that anything really reliable can be found. John of Beverley, Alfred, Grymbald, S. Neot, and the like, are the demi-gods of the Oxford world; then come the degenerate race of mortal heros. Vacarius and Giraldus Cambrensis, and others of their time, who undoubtedly were connected with the University of Oxford, and whose giant forms, girt with gowns and armed with books, seem to stalk through the hosts of innumerable boys assembled at the schools much as we fancy the heroes of the Iliad wielding their weapons among the ranks of men.

The later period of real persons and false facts.

But for these things this is not the place. The series of volumes, of which the present is a part, will doubtless assist the student, who may wish to examine critically the period to which reference is made, and whatever may there occur to him relating to the University of Oxford, though it will, it is feared, be little, will assist his judgment in forming an opinion as to what is not indeed really ascertainable, the state of Oxford anterior to the thirteenth century.

Matter relating to Oxford published in other volumes of this series.

That there were schools there before that time, probably for two or three centuries, if not longer, there is the best reason to believe, but of the nature of them we have little information, and the pictures which the mind forms of them, are such as are drawn, for the most part, from the better known features of a later period. That these schools were more or less connected with the University of Paris seems highly probable; though the extent to which they were so and the nature of that connexion are again matters of conjecture. That the earliest statutes of the University of Oxford were derived from those of Paris the editor has himself little doubt, but the means of forming an opinion on this subject are as easily available to others as they are to him; he would however venture to refer them to the work of Bulæus.[1] To the University of Paris he believes are to be ascribed the most ancient existing relics of the University of Oxford, namely some of the statutes which will be found in Part II. of this volume.

Connexion with the University of Paris.

With these remarks the antiquity of the University generally must be dismissed; but as to the relative antiquity of the several colleges, or of the earliest of them, a brief statement will be expected.

Of the claims of University and Merton colleges to the priority it is really strange there should be ever any question. The whole dispute is settled in a few words. William of Durham, the founder of University College, died in the year 1249, and left his money (310 marks) to support scholars at Oxford; the money was not all applied to this purpose for many years, (though several purchases were made with it in the years 1253, 1255, 1262[2]), and in the meantime Merton College was founded, but not at Oxford; before Merton College was finally established, William of Durham's bequest had been all applied by the University in the purchase of houses, and statutes given for the halls founded therewith. No more need have been said, had not Antony Wood, who was a member of Merton College, while not concealing the facts above mentioned, endeavoured to make it appear that University College was only a hall, whereas Merton was a college, because it is called domus, so that the priority really belonged to the latter. This unfairness may easily be discovered to be such in the pages of this work, where it will be found throughout that Merton College is as often, if not oftener, called aula de Merton as domus or collegium (the latter not till late), and, in fact, Antony Wood must have known, what is obvious to every student of Oxford antiquities, that no distinction whatever originally existed between the terms aula and domus, and, moreover, that the term domus is repeatedly used of University Hall.

Antony Wood's unfairness.

The alleged foundation by Alfred the Great.

And now another vexata quæstio must be touched, though the true solution of it has already been implied in what has been said of the early history of the University. The question whether Alfred the Great had any connexion with the University at all, and if so, whether he had any hand in the founding University Hall or any other hall in Oxford, has caused endless debate, not a little of legal toil and expenditure, and a great deal of pecuniary loss and still more bitterness of feeling! Volumes have been written on the subject, and yet it seems that no candid inquirer can come to any other verdict than that both statements as to King Alfred are absolutely without a shadow of proof. All that can be said in favour of the Aluredians is that there is no direct proof that they are wrong. The astonishing thing is that such a superstructure of fiction was ever raised upon so completely rotten a foundation. There is unfortunately only too much reason to believe that the story of Alfred being the founder of University College was invented, and maintained by one party in the college against another, in order to obtain the privilege of having the sovereign of the country as visitor of their society. The evidence against Alfred having ever founded any exhibitions at all at Oxford is of course of a purely negative character; but it is very strong, for none of those authors, in whose writings we should certainly have expected to find mention of such a circumstance, make any allusion to it whatsoever. To begin with Asser. He at any rate, the instructor and friend of Alfred, the collector of his memorable actions, when ascribing to him the building of two monasteries, the maintenance of teachers for his own children and those of his nobles would surely, one would think, never have omitted to record a work of so kindred a nature as the establishing of educational exhibitions or places of learning at Oxford. And yet we find in this author no such statement, for although it was indeed affirmed[1] that one of the MSS. of Asser contained such a passage, yet, it is believed, no such thing is now to be found, and the said passage was, moreover, affirmed by those who saw it to be a manifest interpolation. But even though it were granted that Alfred did, as alleged in the spurious passage of Asser, establish places of education at Oxford, yet there would be nothing to indicate that he had any hand in the founding of University Hall.

Asser makes no mention of it.

The same absence of any mention of such connexion between this king and the University is equally remarkable in all the earliest authors, in Ethelward, in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, in the chronicle of Mailros, in Ingulphus, in Marianus Scotus, in Florence of Worcester, William of Malmesbury, Henry of Huntingdon, Roger Hoveden, Matthew of Westminster, and others, all of whom, while they extol the wisdom, valour, and piety of Alfred, are altogether silent as to his supposed endowments at Oxford!

Early chroniclers without exception silent on the subject.

[1] By Camden.

The first appearance of the myth.

The first chronicler, in whose writings such a statement is met with, is Ralph Higden: he lived in the time of Edward III. John Brompton in his Historia Jorvallensis, has a passage to the like effect. Here are the two most respectable authorities for the Aluredians; for no sane person would attach any credit to the fables of Thos. Rudborn's Annals of Hyde Abbey. Other writers in their favour are John Ross, T. Kay, Polydore Virgil, Leland, Bale, Camden. It is not without regret that we find such names as Leland and Camden following so false a lead; they, with Wood and Twyne, seem to have only too gladly repeated without sufficient investigation the statements of others, led by their love of antiquity to lend a willing ear to that which gratified their master passion. At least it is plain, from what has been said above, that the founding of halls or places of learning at Oxford by King Alfred was not mentioned by any writer until the time of Edward III.; and the special connexion of Alfred with the halls known as W. of Durham's or University Hall, not until a much later period. The only real claim of Alfred to be considered as the founder of University College is that, as this society is without doubt the eldest, so it seems in harmony with our general ideas of propriety to attribute its origin to the wisest and best of our early kings!—valeat quantum. Unfortunately the claim, sentimental or false, while it is an agreeable myth and no more, has had the effect of causing the name of the true founder W. of Durham to be altogether ignored. Thus have the Aluredians and anti-Aluredians fought with fury round the shadow of a founder, while the real owner of the honours has been conveyed away far out of sight, and not only out of the din of the battle, but also out of the memory of the combatants.

Camden and Leland.

The archives of the University and of Univer-

It is altogether incredible that, if Alfred were its founder, the statutes of University College, three several codes of which were issued within sixty years from the purchase of the first house with the founder's money, should contain not the smallest allusion to him. Still more incredible that the statutes and register books of the University should never once mention the name of their first founder, while special ordinances are given, and commemorations with solemn masses and other annual observances are therein enjoined for every known benefactor in later times. (See in Index under Benefactor and Chest.)

sity College know nothing of him.

It will be perceived from what has already been said that little, which can be called history, is to be found of the University of Oxford in early times. After the conquest, during the seven reigns which preceded that of Henry III. we begin to be sensible of the approach of terra firma, but it is not until the end of the twelfth century and beginning of the thirteenth that we can really feel that we have placed our feet on solid ground. It is no part of the present undertaking to collect whatever scattered notices of Oxford may exist in the chronicles and other sources during the dawn of its existence.

Early history of Oxford very scanty.

Contemporary records

We pass on now to speak of the more tangible and really historical period, having thus sketched in as few words as possible some of the most salient points, and given, it is hoped, a sufficient reason for not commencing this volume with anything earlier than the 13th century. There are no documents in MS. in the possession of the University itself relating to an earlier period, and it is more than doubtful whether there are any, beyond those already mentioned, in any other collections. With one or two remarks more this subject shall be dismissed. First, while we cannot doubt that a considerable number of scholars studied at Oxford in the 11th and 12th centuries, yet the facts that no species of pecuniary support was from any source, that we know of, appointed for them, and that no royal charter or other letter has ever been produced hitherto, though A. Wood speaks of their loss, of an earlier reign than that of Henry III., seem to raise a very strong suspicion that the University did not exist at all before the conquest, and that as soon as it became important enough to deserve and require royal recognition it immediately obtained it, and thenceforth began its corporate existence, its true history in its only recognizable form. The origin of the city cannot be traced beyond the time of S. Frideswyde.[1] Round the ecclesiastical foundation raised in her honour sprung up in all likelihood both the town and the schools, at first, it is probable, a school in connexion with S. Frideswyde's priory, afterwards developed by gradual successes to a more general place of resort for students; a "studium generale," as the term then generally used expresses it. The word University is not used in our sense earlier than the reign of Henry III. In its first use the word "University" had probably no reference to the general studies there to be pursued, but rather expressed the corporate estate of the "Chancellor, masters, and scholars," to whom the words "Universitas vestra"[2] applied, meaning, strange as it may appear to those unacquainted with patent letters of the time, "The whole of you." and meaning of the word.

Leaving then this interesting and yet most unsatisfactory subject, which the curious and credulous may find pursued beyond all reasonable bounds in the works of Wood, Twyne, Ayliffe, and others, we now have to give a short account of the real foundation, properly so called, of the [1] There are two registers of S. Frideswyde's priory extant: one in the possession of C. C. College, and the other in the possession of Christ Church, Oxford; the former is trustworthy, the latter full of forgeries, some of which B. Twyne quotes in support of his extravagancies.—Ed.

University; that is to say, of the first benefactions assigned or bequeathed to it for the maintenance of scholars. Of these the first that occurs is the annual payment of fifty-two shillings by the townsmen, as compensation in part for the outrage committed by them in hanging certain clerks (pp. 1, 2, 501), a burden which was afterwards undertaken by the abbey of Eynsham in the year 1219, and regularly discharged by them until the dissolution of the monastery.[1] A similar payment, how originating does not clearly appear, was made also by the abbey of Oseneye,[1] but to a smaller amount, viz., two marks only (p. 502). The former of these payments not having been regularly applied to the purpose for which it was designed, Robert Grossteste, the then chancellor, issued in the year 1240 an ordinance to provide for the proper administration of the fund: the immediate effect of which was the creation of the first "chest," called the "Frideswyde chest" (p. 9). Of this and other similar foundations more shall be said presently; here we must for a while interrupt the natural order by first enumerating the other sources of the revenue of the infant University.

Other sources of revenue.

The next pecuniary resource we find is an annual payment by masters who kept grammar schools at Oxford (p. 563). How early the practice arose there is no evidence to show, but it appears that from the earliest time, at least of the corporate existence of the University, all masters keeping grammar schools were obliged to make a stated annual payment to the University, and a provision was made in the year 1478 that if any grammar schools should be endowed at Oxford, they should be free from this payment; an inducement doubtless to encourage so desirable a benefaction (p. 354). To this should be added the sum arising payments of money made by those who sought "graces" for special relaxation of statutes in their favour (numerous instances of which will be found in Part ii.), an indulgence which was a large and continuous source of emolument to the University during the erection of the Divinity School. (See Dispensation.) In A., B., C., &c. we find no other sources of revenue (except "chests") besides those mentioned, until Robert Anetone's and Walter (by some called William) de Gray's and John Benefactions in imitation of the bequest of William of Durham.

Manduit's benefactions (p. 10). These do not date earlier than 1255, but it is known from other sources that W. Hoyland left, shortly before that time, his estate to the University, part of which, called after him "William Hall," was the first house, not bought with W. of Durham's money, possessed by the University. In the meantime had occurred the bequest of W. of Durham, of which sufficient notice has been given above (p. 39). Then followed bequests by Reginald de Bathon (p. 372), beadle, by Roger Addington (stationer), and by Roger Leigh (beadle), and from this time the University gradually began to acquire property. To follow the steps of this process of acquisition is, however, no part of our present scheme, though it should be observed that all the bequests above named were either of houses for halls or shortly after were converted to that purpose, and thus were direct imitations of the example of William of Durham, who commenced the system, before his bequest unthought of, of leaving money to provide residences for societies of scholars.

The chests

We now return to the subject of the "chests." This, the earliest form of corporate property possessed by the University, took its origin, as we have seen, from the ordinance of Robert Grossteste, and for a long period remained, par excellence, the form of scholastic benefaction. The bequests of W. of Durham, W. of Merton, and J. Balliol were, at their time, and long remained, insignificant; they provided for a few scholars, only a very few compared with the numbers around them, and long remained without imitation, while the Turvile, Guildford, Langton, and other chests were founded.

are the earliest form of benefaction;

These foundations then are to be regarded as the earliest form of benefaction for relief of poor scholars which the benevolence of the charitable assumed. That they continued to exist and multiply until the end of the fifteenth century, when they had reached the number of twenty-four, need not surprise us; for, though a most distinct form of charity, the founding of colleges speedily followed the institution of the first chest, and continued also to extend itself, yet there was ample room for the exercise of the relief afforded by both. The poverty of the scholars was in a large majority of instances very great, and the fact that these chests continued to be founded side by side, as it were, with the colleges proves how necessary their assistance was. It has been said that these chests numbered altogether not less than twenty-four; perhaps they may have been more numerous, but of twenty-four we have either ordinances remaining or, at the least, portions of ordinances. The object of all the founders was apparently the same, and there is so great a similarity in the ordinances issued by the University for the administration of the funds that the remarks made of one will apply, with few alterations, to all. The preamble of the ordinance sets forth the name of the founder of the chest, the sum given, and the object of the founder, and then expresses the desire of the University to recompense his charity, in the only way they are able, by annual masses and celebrations, and by enjoining every beneficiary to recite so many Pater nosters or Ave Marias for the soul of his benefactor. Then follow regulations as to the amount to be borrowed and the persons by whom it may be borrowed, a pledge to the full amount of, or above, the value borrowed being in each case first deposited by the person borrowing; the time within which he may redeem his pledge by repayment, and the date at which it will be sold if not redeemed, after due notice by public proclamation given; the appointment of guardians (usually a North and a South countryman, to ensure fair consideration of the claims of applicants), of auditors and of the day of audit, of the registration of loans and borrowers' names, with other particulars. The last founded of the chests (in the latter part of the fifteenth century) raises the total amount of money thus placed at the disposal of the University at no less a sum, on a moderate computation, than two thousand marks; and, in estimating the aid thus afforded to the needy, it should be borne in mind that this was not capital, of which the interest was to be lent only, but the whole two thousand marks might be, and probably usually were, in circulation on loan at the same time. It was in reality little less than a money-lending, or, more properly, pawnbroking, department; and might have been managed so as to secure very considerable augmentation of the funds, for the ordinances always carefully stipulate that the pledges deposited should, on the valuation of a sworn stationer of the University, fairly exceed in value the sum borrowed, that the capital might suffer no diminution. Such augmentation appears also, from the wording of the ordinances in some cases, to have been confidently expected, for the guardians at their audit were to give account both of capital and increase during their tenure of office. That these hopes were not realized there is every reason to believe, for more than once we find guardians of chests charged with embezzlement, and again (pp.

Summer and winter chests.

The chests were divided into two divisions, the "summer" and "winter" chests, so called, it would appear, from the time at which the guardians of some of them were elected (p. 745). Whether or no there was any other distinction does not appear; but it is plain that in the time of appointing the guardians the original provisions of the ordinances were, in the later times which we have to deal with, not observed.

Restrictions on borrowers.

Here, then, was a very large sum, which might be borrowed by any clerk actually studying at Oxford, whether master, bachelor, sophist, or questionist, irrespective of any restrictions by founders' wills as to birth, age, or locality. How great a help it must have been to the struggling scholar of those days we can perhaps hardly realize; but of this more may be said hereafter. It is, however, a circumstance not a little remarkable that on the revision, or rather destruction of the statutes in Laud's time the names of all or nearly all these charitable benefactors should have ceased to be commemorated, and, as far as any grateful recollection of their bequests is concerned, should have ceased to be known in the University at all. What ordinary member of the University is aware of the pious benefactions, by which the University in its early poverty was nursed, of John Pontysera bishop of Winchester, Gilbert Routhbury, Philip Turville, John Langton, W. de Seltone, Dame Joan Danvers, and others; and yet to their generosity many a starving clerk was indebted in days when the learned professions were recruited far more than they have ever since been from the humblest ranks of society. We cannot take leave of so interesting a feature in mediæval academical life as this is without lingering for a few moments on the vivid picture thus pourtrayed to us of the life of a student at the time.

Description of the business of inspection of, and borrowing from a chest.

Let us try to fancy ourselves in Oxford on the eve of the festival of "S. John at the Latin gate" (May 7th), in the year of grace 1457. To-morrow is the commemoration day of W. de Seltone, founder of the chest known by his name; and this day the two new guardians of the chest have been appointed and sworn in before congregation, along with all the other guardians of the several chests. It was, of course well known before who would be appointed to situations of such trust, but they are Master T. Parys, principal of S. Mary Hall, and Master Lowson (p. 745); the latter is the North countryman of the two, it would seem. High mass has just been sung at the principal altar of the church of S. Mary the Blessed Virgin (p. 214), with commemoration collects, with deacon and subdeacon and all accustomed solemnity, and solemn prayers for the repose of the souls of W. de Seltone and all the faithful departed. It is not a reading (or legible) day,[1] so the church was full, but now all have left, except a few ragged-looking lads, who still kneel towards the altar and seem to be saying their "Pater nosters" and "Ave Marias" according to their vow for their benefactor (p. 218). Master Parys and Master Lowson, however, have left earlier; we will follow them out of the chancel into the old congregation house, a part of the church formerly used for all academical purposes; for thither, we presume, they will go to make their first inspection of the Seltone chest.

from one to another with the change of guardians every year, they are therefore kept in the church, and the sanctity of the spot is a protection from thieves (pp. 669, 750).)

Dress of masters.

The dress of Master Parys and his colleague may surprise us; they have their tonsured heads covered with the "pilleum" (pp. 428, 457); their tunics are closely fastened round the waist by a belt (pp. 421, 302), over which they wear a long gown; round the shoulders is a black close cape without sleeves, and over it hangs the hood, lined with white fur (p. 301). We enter the building with them, and there we see ranged on either side several ponderous iron chests, eight or ten feet in length and about half that width, for they have to contain perhaps as many as a hundred or more large volumes (pp. 327, 152), besides other valuables deposited as pledges by those who have borrowed from the chest. Each (p. 152) draws from beneath his cape a huge key, which one after the other are applied to the two locks; a system of bolts, which radiate from the centre of the lid and shoot into the iron sides in a dozen different places, slide back and the lid is opened. At the top lies the register of the contents (p. 215), containing the particulars;—dates, names, and amounts—of the loans granted. This they remove and begin to compare its statements with the contents of the chest. There are a large number of manuscript volumes, many of great value, beautifully illuminated and carefully kept, for each is almost the sole valuable possession perhaps of its owner! Then the money remaining in one corner of the chest is carefully counted and compared with the account in the register. If we look in we can see also here and there among the books other valuables of less peaceful character. There lie two or three daggers of more than ordinary workmanship, and by them a silver cup or two (p. 663), and again more than one hood lined with mineyer (p. 301). By this time a number of persons has eolleeted around the ehest, and the business begins. That man in an ordinary civilian's dress who stands beside Master Parys is John More, the University stationer (p. 629), and it is his offiee to fix the value of the pledges offered, and to take eare that none are sold at less than their real value (p. 383). It is a motley group that stands around; there are several masters and baehelors, all dressed more or less as described above, but the larger proportion is of boys or quite young men in every variety of coloured dress, blue and red, medley, and the like, but without any academieal dress (pp. 301, 360). Many of them are very seantily elothed (p. 684), and all have their attention rivetted on the ehest, eaeh with eurious eye watching for his pledge, his book or his cup, brought from some country village, perhaps an old treasure of his family, and now pledged in his extremity, for last term he could not pay the prineipal of his hall the rent of his miserable garret, nor the maneiple for his battels (pp. 527, 555), but now he is in funds again, and pulls from his leathern money-pouch at his girdle the eoin whieh is to repossess him of his property. But among the group you may see one master whose bearing and dress plainly denote superior eomfort and position; can he be here for the same purpose? Yes, it is Master Henry Sever, warden of Merton Hall (p. 531). His presenee is plainly regarded with disfavour and jealousy by the scholars, they think it not fair that the funds of the chest should be used by such as he; but he has influence, and lately he has been making some repairs in the buildings of Merton Hall, and he has borrowed from the Seltone ehest, the extreme sum permitted by the ordinance, sixty shillings for that purpose (p. 216). He watehes the proceedings, however, not without anxiety, for he had pledged a valuable illuminated missal far beyond the value he was to borrow, and he knows that his pledge may not be in the chest, for he omitted to redeem it at the proper time, and it was borrowed for inspection by an intending purchaser (p. 217), who had left a silver cup in its place, of more intrinsic value, by the stationer's decision, but not in Mr. Sever's eyes. His case is first gone into, and he is satisfied that he can probably effect an exchange again with the present possessor of his missal, so he walks away with the cup, and then the lesser applicants urge their claims, some redeem their pledges, some borrow fresh sums, some are new customers and sorrowfully deposit their treasures and slink sadly away, not without a titter from the more hardened bystanders, but before the iron lid closes again, and the bolts slide back, "Ye shall pray," says Master Parys, addressing the borrowers, "for the "soul of W. de Seltone and all the faithful departed." This concludes the business of the day.

Such may be taken probably, as a fair specimen of an ordinary transaction at the period we speak of. The large number of chests, each of which was monthly inspected, rendered such a ceremony of almost every day occurrence. For some of the particulars we have a little drawn on our imagination, but the names and dates are real, and the facts are possible and indeed probable, as will be seen by the reader if he refers to the pages of the work indicated. After thus dealing with what is tangible and matter of undoubted fact, it is distasteful to have to launch once again upon the uncertain; but we must not any longer defer giving a few minutes attention to the halls, which were so long nothing less than the University itself.

Enough has already been said of the halls supposed to have been founded by king Alfred to show that these really never had any existence; when the first halls were established must probably ever remain uncertain. A distinction must, however, carefully be made between halls with foundations or allowances for scholars living therein, and the ordinary halls, otherwise called "Hostels," "Inns," "Entries."[1] The former are colleges, but were originally called halls along with the latter indiscriminately. After the foundation of W. of Durham, his example was followed to some extent by others; several houses, as has been noticed above, being bequeathed to the University, to be used as halls; and then the next step follows, the regular endowment of such houses. The remarks which are now to follow relate, however, only to the unendowed halls or inns. These were for two centuries, certainly from the conquest up to W. of Durham's foundation, and according to those who believe in the great antiquity of Oxford much earlier, the only provision for the residence of scholars at Oxford, excepting, of course, such schools as may have existed in the religious houses and which were maintained at their cost. The editor believes, as he has stated above, that the University took its rise from these schools; that in course of time scholars were attracted to Oxford who were not admitted into these schools but "boarded" at a sort of "dames' houses" in the city; and that those houses were the lineal ancestors of all the large family of halls which throve in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries.

Residence of scholars in early times.

First schools at Oxford.

The transition from mere grammar schools to a "studium generale," or, as we call it, an University, cannot be traced, the probability, however, almost amounting to a certainty, is that it was effected by a nearly wholesale adoption of the regulations of the University of Paris. Along with this transition naturally took place a reconstruction of the already existing boarding houses for scholars: doubtless it was found that such establishments were amenable to no proper controlling power, and the cause of grave irregularities; accordingly we find it provided by a statute of uncertain date, but which, as has already been said, is of a very early period, that a "mancipium" may not be principal of a hall (p. 463), again by another statute that the principal of a hall shall always be a graduate (p. 307), so late as the 15th century; by another that no scholar may dwell in the house of a layman, i.e., a person not of the privilege of the University, and therefore not subject to its authority (pp. 320, 279).

Control exercised by the University over the scholars.

From these and from other similar enactments, which will occur to the reader, it is plain that the constant effort of the University was to bring under regular and fixed discipline the "hostels" for scholars which had long existed more or less outside its authority. No doubt a great step in this direction was effected by the corporate existence and large privileges granted by Henry III. Before that time the houses for scholars were let to the clerks by the townsmen on their own terms, and apparently with circumstances of extortion, thus we find (page 1) that the first idea of a penalty to be inflicted on the town was that the citizens should excuse the clerks half of their rent for a term of years; but afterwards the clerks appear to have got the matter very much into their own hands, for we find (p. 53) that one of the complaints made to the king (Anno 1290) is that the chancellor and scholars will not allow the townsmen to let their houses to scholars for a less term than ten years.

Halls rented from the townsmen.

More details as to the regulation of the halls will occur to us when speaking of the condition of a scholar, but this appears to be the proper place in which to give some account of the position and tenure of the principals of such institutions. At what time they began to be such as is described is not clearly definable as usual, but in the statutes of various dates here given, we find them usually to have been, though not invariably (p. 528), of the degree of Master of Arts at least; and the method of obtaining the office was very simple. On the 9th of September,[1] every year (p. 15), the chancellor or his commissary (p. 522) took his place with all the usual solemnity in the church of Mary the Blessed Virgin, a bell being tolled as it would appear (p. 521) during the ceremony. Then those masters, who either desired to continue in their present principalship or to undertake the office for the future appeared before him, or else appointed another to do so in their stead, and deposited, each for the hall of which he proposed to be principal, a caution to insure the due payment of the rent, and apparently some tax payable to the University, though what that was, if any, we do not find. A similar method was adopted with respect to the schools (ibid), for which some one master was always responsible; these, however, would not have been all the schools, for only two or three are ever thus mentioned along with the halls (see Lists of Halls, Index). It would seem that the University was responsible for the payment of the rent to the owners of the halls and these particular schools, and that the principals deposited cautions for their payment of rent to the University.

Mode and ceremony of qualifying for office of principal of halls and schools.

Having thus secured possession of their halls, their object, of course, was to fill them, since the matter was purely a pecuniary speculation, the scholars who lived with them paying the principals for their rooms and lectures as in our times (17, 426, 555, 600), for in the fifteenth century, at any rate, and there is no reason to suppose that Lectures in halls.

[1] It would appear from the statute here referred to that the office was annual, but in Aaa we do not find a fresh list of halls nearly so often as every year, and it would appear that at that time, 1438–1460, a term of four years was the usual duration.

the practice began then, we find that the scholars were obliged to hear lectures in their own halls from their principal, or other lecturer appointed by him, in addition to the attendance at the schools. Of the amount of these payments notice will be taken in the sequel, when speaking of the scholars.

The principals of halls.

From what has been said it will be a fair presumption that these principals were usually men of some learning and academical distinction, at least in the time of which we are now speaking (1450). As to their tenure of office, we have seen it was originally presumed to be annual, but it was quite common to hold the office for many years, and also, as will be seen on comparing the lists of halls given in Part II., for a principal to change from one hall to another, which he supposed would answer better, for having a better situation or better rooms, &c. Although, however, these principals of halls were thus to a considerable degree independent, yet they were most distinctly and strictly subject to general regulations, and, especially, they could be deprived absolutely, and, as it seems, without investigation, by the chancellor or his commissary, for which proceeding there was a proper form (p. 470). Further, they were obliged to reside in their halls (p. 360), and in case of absence to appoint a deputy; to report disorderly scholars to the Chancellor, to keep a list of their scholars, to read to them the aularian statutes three times every year (p. 358), along with other peculiar duties, which will be readily found by the reader on reference to the index of this work. Perhaps, what will strike us as most singular is that it was thought necessary to provide by statute that no "mancipium," (i.e., a servant who catered also for the scholars) should be principal of a hall, even though he were a scholar himself (p. 468), but it was by no means unusual for a person in the condition of a servant to be at the same time a scholar, and regularly attending his lectures (pp. 656, 661).

Their office and tenure.

Curious qualifications for.

Number of halls exaggerated.

Before leaving the subject a few words should be said of the probable number of these halls. Among the other extravaganees, which have been repeated for the purpose of enhancing the reputation of the University, must be reckoned the statement of Richard of Armagh, that there were in the thirteenth century, 30,000 scholars at Oxford. It is apparent from the known boundaries of the city at the time, that this is next to impossible, and, certainly, quite incredible. Explanations have been attempted, to the effect that under "scholars" is here intended to be reckoned the whole number of persons who could claim the privilege of the University (see pp. 52, 346). And that this number included all clerks also of whatever age living at Oxford, and that there were no public or other grammar schools except here and at Cambridge, in England, so that all the youth of the kingdom were educated at these two places. But no sort of ground for rating the numbers at so great an amount really exists; on the contrary, it is probable that, of scholars properly so called, the sum stated divided by five would give a far more true approximation to the reality; to these may, perhaps, be added nearly as many more members of the privilege, but not students. At any rate, in the evidences we possess, we find no more than about eighty halls; from the remains of such as now exist, and there are several, we cannot put their inhabitants at more than an average of thirty, and this is, it is likely, a very high average to allow. This, the outside number of students which we can allow even in the most flourishing period of the history of the University, would suppose the existence of at least double the number of halls known to have been in use at any one time. This is a wide margin, and would fairly include the whole number, probably at no time very large, of students not residing in any hall. In the year 1503, these halls had decreased to fifty, and in 1511, to only twenty-six, so rapid was the decrease and absorption by the colleges. Of the various vicissitudes in the numbers of the University, and therefore of the halls, no detailed account can be given here; war and pestilence more than once drove away almost every scholar from the place: nor again can we find room for a topographical inquiry. These matters, along with others of a more general or antiquarian interest, must find another place.

Probable real number.

Rapid extinction of.

Clerks claimed a right to use any house as a school.

It would seem to follow naturally next to mention the schools. Very early we find the scholars to have had the right of demanding any house from its owner for this use, to be rented at a sum fixed by regular valuers (pp. 13, 14, 156), and some of the earliest bequests to the University were employed in purchasing other houses to be used as schools; perhaps these so purchased may have been the few schools mentioned above as enumerated along with the halls (p. 46). The number of houses so used doubtless varied as the halls, but we find that at one time there were thirty-two such schools in one street called "School-street" (p. 240), and there would probably be a few more in other localities. These schools were divided among the several faculties, and in them took place all public lectures and disputations and other exercises for degrees (ibid. and p. 274). Whether the thirty-two schools above named occupied the site of the whole of the present eastern front of Brasenose (except that part of it which we know consisted of old University Hall) as well as the opposite side of the street where now the Radcliffe Library stands, or whether there were other buildings intermixed with the schools does not appear; the only interest attaching to the inquiry is that upon its answer would depend in a great degree our estimate of the size of the schools. The editor inclines to the opinion that there were other buildings also there, and for this reason,—the accommodation in the said thirty-two schools must have been small and insufficient, otherwise the present schools probable size, and other arrangements.

(called at first the New Schools) would never have been considered an improvement, and if so then the houses in which the schools were must have been small. It seems most likely that each house or school contained more than one, perhaps several chambers used for this purpose, as lecture-rooms in fact, by the master who occupied them. Every master at his "inception" (i.e. on commencing the exercise of his newly-acquired right of lecturing) was obliged to be provided with a school for that purpose (p. 415). Now, as inception with the course of lectures succeeding it occupied the remainder of the current year and the whole of that succeeding, the number of inceptors lecturing at one time must have been greatly above thirty-two in all the faculties together. We may, therefore, fairly presume that each "school" was in fact several schools; and each several school was occupied by its own master with his audience of scholars. The remarks above made are not intended to apply to the "grammar schools;" it is possible that some of the thirty-two schools above mentioned may have been used at times for this purpose, but it would appear that the grammar schools were distinct (p. 363) and of an inferior and subordinate character, liable to inspection by two Masters of Arts deputed for that purpose (p. 85), and not unfrequently taught by other than graduates (p. 87), who were, however, always obliged to be licensed for that purpose (p. 436). More may be said of these when speaking of the studies of the University; we will now glance at the condition and earliest known establishment of the libraries.

The first library of the University.

Of the first library known to have existed at Oxford, the editor finds nothing in the MSS. which have come within his reach; in the well-known work of Richard of Durham (Philobiblon, ch. 13 and 14) will be found an account of this library, originally established by the monks of Durham, at their house for their scholars, which stood where Trinity College now is. Beyond what is stated in the work alluded to, nothing further is, it is supposed, possible to be discovered. It appears that this library only preceded the next institution of the kind by about 35 years, for Thomas Cobham, Bishop of Worcester, who died in 1327, left a large number of books to the University, and of these we have some account in the present volume (p. 222). The original MS. of the statute for the regulation of this library is lost, but it is preserved, as usual, by a copy in the MSS. A., B., and C. This statute provides that the books shall be chained in convenient order in the "soler" or upper chamber over the old congregation house, already mentioned as the store-house of all the University's property; it likewise provides for the salary of a librarian, called the chaplain, whose office it was to have the care of the books, and to pray for the soul of the founder. It is plain, from a statute relating the "Chest of four keys," (p. 152) that there were also other books belonging to the University, besides those already spoken of, and which were kept in chests, and, as it would seem lent upon indenture or depositing pledges (p. 323), in the same way as we have described to have been done in the case of other chests, to scholars wishing to read them. It was also not an uncommon thing for a person to bequeath or otherwise give a book or books (p. 270), to be chained in the chancel of a church, for the express use of the scholars, and to be inspected regularly by the chancellor and proctors, to secure it from injury. Thus were the scholars supplied with books,—and, it would appear, thus only, except by possessing them themselves, which not many would be able to do, or at least not to the extent of more than a volume or two, and the majority probably had not any at all,—until that great, and to the University of that time, almost unspeakable blessing, the donations of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. How they were valued we can hardly form an idea from what occurs in this work; but in the letters of the University at the time, which are set out in MS. F, already described, we have the outpouring of the gratitude of their hearts. No epithets of praise and adulation are too high or too low for "vestra humillima oratrix, cœtus Magistrorum regentium Oxoniæ," (such in the almost invariable style,) to use in addressing the executors. There was, it seems from the correspondence, a very considerable difficulty and delay in obtaining possession of some of the books, and when they actually came to hand, the general joy knew no bounds. He had made many valuable presents of books during his lifetime, which are gratefully remembered in the statutes for the library (pp. 261, 266, 326), the whole number being certainly more than 300, if we include the smaller donations (p. 327) which he gave from time to time, besides the two of which catalogues will be found in this work, (p. 758), and after his death there was a further very large addition. Of all these books, a donation of which it may with truth be said, that it did more for the University than any other benefaction before or after it has done, only one is supposed to be now remaining in the Bodleian library! It is not a little instructive, as exhibiting the tastes and studies of the period, to inspect these catalogues. The contents would hardly be thought valuable, except as curiosities, by a student of the present day. A very large proportion are theological works, with a less number of mathematical, medical, and astronomical. Not a few copies of parts of Aristotle (translations it would appear), but of other classical authors only a few. We find, however, copies of Cicero, Seneca, Cato moralizatus, Pliny, Quintilian; one copy of Plato, one of Suetonius, one of Æschines, one of Livy, one of Ovid; of Greek classics none beside Æschines, unless we except the portions of Aristotle and the copy of Plato, and these were probably Latin translations. It is surprising to find that English chronicles are almost unrepresented (Capgrave and the Polychronicon being the only specimens), and that of the works of Petrarch and Boccaccio there are very numerous copies, and of Dante more than one.[1] For a more careful analysis of the catalogue the reader must refer to the document for himself. We will proceed to notice briefly the regulations for the use of the library, made before these books were given, but continuing to regulate its management, until the foundation of the Bodleian(p. 261). There are three principal statutes regulating the library, the first (p. 226) for the Cobham Library; the next made in the year 1412, on what special occasion does not appear, but probably in consequence of recent donations of books by the chancellor at the time, Richard Courtenay, and others there specified as benefactors (p. 266); the third on the occasion of the great donation by Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, in the year 1439 (p. 326). The provisions of the first statute were considerably modified by the second. The chaplain's (or librarian's) stipend was very considerably increased, and he appears to have become one of the principal officers of the University; very stringent clauses bind the proctors to pay him his stipend regularly, lest he should become disgusted at the tardiness of his remuneration, and consequently neglect the books under his care, and it was further provided that every beneficed graduate should on his inception present the chaplain with clothes (p. 263), as was customary in the case of the bedels (ibid., and p. 324), for it is quaintly observed, it would be absurd that one who is adorned with superior dignity should have inferior privileges (p. 263). After providing for the safe custody of the books, the next thing was to declare who should use them; and it would seem that experience had in this case, as usual, brought wisdom; for, whereas in the ordinance for the Cobham Library it is permitted to all scholars to have free access to the books at proper times, in the second ordinance we find that no one was to be allowed to use the library except graduates or religious, and the latter only under a restriction that they must be of eight years' standing "in philosophia," a rule which was strictly observed, for we read (p. 751) that a monk of the name of Hardwyke was only allowed to use this privilege after obtaining a "grace" for the purpose, and even then his permission did not extend beyond one term. These at first sight appear unnecessarily stringent rules, but it must be remembered that non-graduates were of a different class from what we might expect from our modern experience; probably many of them mere boys, and, what is worse, very dirty boys, and as to the monks, the intention in so limiting their admission doubtless was that more room and greater facilities for study should be available for masters and bachelors, who had not, as many of the religious houses had, libraries of their own to which they could resort, and further, the size of the room in which the books were kept was, or rather is, not by any means adapted for large numbers of students. In those days of scarcity of books some hard-reading monk might sit hour after hour and day after day, and completely monopolize some sole copy of a useful work, or the dirty fingers of some ragged scholar utterly ruin a precious illumination. A solemn oath, moreover, was exacted from all graduates on admission to their degree (pp. 265, 375) that they would use the books "modo honesto et pacifico nulli librorum, per-turpitudinem aut rasuras abolitionesve foliorum, præjudicium inferendo." The health of the librarian was not forgotten; he was to be allowed a month's absence, lest he should languish from constant residence, and the hours during which the library was to be open were to be from 9 till 11 o'clock a.m., and from 1 till 4 o'clock p.m. except on Sundays and holy days; but if any distinguished stranger wished to visit the library he might do so from sunrise to sunset, always provided he was not followed by a noisy rabble. As you entered the room you would see a large board hung against the wall, on which were written the names of all the books in the library, and the names also of the donors, lest "oblivion, the step-mother of memory, "should pluck from our breasts the memory of our "benefactors," as the statute has it (p. 267); for the better remembrance of whose gifts solemn mass "of the "Holy Ghost" was thrice to be said, and once a "requiem" mass every quarter of the year at the altar of S. Katherine in the church of the Blessed Virgin. Careful was the ordinance also to enjoin that the books should be closed and also the windows of the library every night (p. 267). The third statute for the library need not be so fully noticed. It makes special provision that the books shall not be removed from the library, with certain particular exceptions (p. 327), and that the memory of the donor shall be celebrated while he lives and after his death for ever, by the customary appointment of masses and proper collects, as in the case of the founders of the several chests (supra, p. 38). Here we must take our leave of the library.

Commemoration of benefactors.

Having described the main institutions of the University, omitting any separate account of the foundations of the several colleges, which forms no part of our plan, and which can be found elsewhere along with the peculiar objects of their founders,—

We now go on to speak of those for whom the University existed, its members; of their lives and occupations, their several studies and duties, so far as they are illustrated or explained in the contents of this volume. Of the relation of the University to the State, of its connexion with the church and antagonism to the regular clergy, there are, as will be expected, numerous evidences in the documents here printed. It will, however, be at once perceived that to attempt any satisfactory investigation of these things would, though interesting in the extreme, carry us out of our necessary limits; they are subjects which belong to a history of the University in relation to the general history of England, and must with regret be omitted here; even to trace the connexion of those events of the kind, which are to be found in the present volume, with the history of the time, would occupy more space than we have to give to the whole of the present introduction. Whatever facts of such history are in the documents now printed can be readily referred to, it is hoped, by means of the index.

Meaning of the terms "scholar,"

In dealing with our next subject we will begin with the scholars, and then in order proceed to the several graduates, and lastly, if space permits, to the officers of the University. And, on the threshold, we must caution those who may need the information, that the term "scholar" is one of ambiguous meaning; in its largest sense it is sometimes used even to include all members of the University being actual students, unless perhaps the chancellor was excepted (pp. 344–8), and is in such cases to be understood as equivalent to the more usual term "clerk." In its more technical sense "scholar" means one "in statu pupillari," or, perhaps, those under the rank of Bachelor of Arts, though this degree is hardly recognised as such. And it is necessary, in order to understand the documents relating to mediæval Oxford, to remember that in those times men were divided into "laymen" and "clerks," a distinction more nearly equivalent to "town" and "gown" of modern times than any other the editor can suggest. And in this division "clerks" would be taken to include all servants of clerks and other members of the privilege, whose interests naturally were one with the actual students; some of whom were, as has been said, students also themselves, and who by virtue of their dependence on the "clerks" proper, were in a state of chronic antagonism to the "laymen" or "town" and its authorities. And to avoid the necessity of recurring again to the explanation of these terms, it should here be also mentioned that the title "Master" did not, as now it does, signify only a Master of Arts, but was used generally to denote one who had taken the highest degree in any faculty, and is often, therefore, used indifferently with that of "doctor." "Master" William of Durham is an instance.

Perhaps, the simplest way of dealing with this subject will be to trace the whole course of a scholar from the time of his leaving his home to the completion of his academical course. In attempting this, the editor would fain claim indulgence for advancing occasionally statements which are not literally matters of fact, but are nevertheless, he believes, in substance correct.

The academical course of a scholar sketched.

At the outset, we are met by a difficulty of no slight magnitude, the question, namely, of age. At what age did students repair to Oxford in, we will say, the fifteenth century? There would appear to have been wonderfully little real change in the condition or studies of the students during the whole period treated of in this volume; occasionally modifications of the necessary studies, &c., and increased endowments, were made, but the statute books, beyond these, inform us of little else that will render the remarks which we shall make as to the fifteenth century less applicable to the fourteenth or thirteenth.

There is no doubt whatever, that the boys, as a rule, resorted to the University at a very early age, earlier probably, than is usually supposed; and yet there appears to have been no statutable limit as to age, so that it may be assumed as certain that, while the majority would go at the age of from ten to twelve years, (i.e., supposing them to commence their education at Oxford, of which more will be said shortly), there would be found also a large number of more mature age. The difficulty which occurs is then, how to account for the numerous occasions on which we find scholars punished for such offences as bearing weapons (p. 91, and passim, see Scholars), turbulence, sueing-at-law (p. 302), engaging in merchandise and having children (p. 346), buying and selling victuals (p. 468), robbing with violence (p. 531), along with other delinquencies too numerous to mention, but all plainly proving that the offenders were not young boys!

In the first place, it will be remembered that the term "scholar" is to be taken as sometimes including all clerks, though more generally, it is used in our own sense, as equal to non-graduate members of the University; but, without the extension admitted by this larger meaning, it will be clear from what shall be now said that even the term "scholar," in our modern acceptation of its meaning, will include all ages, and in considerable numbers of every age, from their tenth or twelfth to their twentieth year.

Let us suppose then, that a yeoman's son, to his father's vexation, for he thinks but meanly of book-learning, shows no aptitude for the plough or for the sword, but is somewhat paler and feebler than his brothers and takes more pleasure in an old illuminated missal, that lies on the shelf, than in country pursuits or boyish sports, and is often to be found persuading the chaplain at the squire's or the priest of the parish to instruct him a little in the mysterious art of reading. It is clear, of course, that the child is fit for nothing else, he must be made a clerk of.

The only material impediment is the pecuniary aspect of the case, but, supposing that to be surmounted, due inquiries are made of the nearest authority on such things, and it is resolved that the boy shall go to Oxford. He is eleven years of age, and now the Michaelmas term, his parents find, is just about to commence. The first thing to manage is the journey, but this is an easier thing than may be thought, for at the nearest town every autumn, about the first day of October, there is to be found at the hostelry, a man, who will manage all this without difficulty and for no very exorbitant charge; he is a "fetcher" of scholars "to and fro the University." (p. 346.) Term begins on S. Denis' day (9th of October), and it will take a week to ride to Oxford, and the new scholars will require a day or two after their arrival to get settled in their halls. The "feteher" has already been two or three days on the road, for he has a regular route, which he takes every year, and at each town he comes to he picks up one or two boys, so that already he has a troop of eight or ten, which will be swelled, perhaps, to twenty or more by the time he reaches his destination at the "Cardinalls Hatte" inn, at Oxford (p. 685). Some of the boys are also attended by their own servants (p. 346), so that altogether the cavalcade is a considerable one, mounted and armed (p. 91), for protection against violence.

Arrangements for the journey to the University.

If the reader is curious as to the expenses of the journey, he will find that it could be performed, including beds, and even wine and expenses of horse, at the rate of about fivepence a head each day, and probably this sum would be very much reduced in the case of boys, poor scholars, who would surely have no wine, probably no fire or candles, all which are included in the above estimate (see Appendix, p. 793), so that we may probably set down the expenses at not more than twopence half-penny or threepence a day, or perhaps even less; a sum which, however, is not so insignificant as may at first sight appear.

Various estimates have been made of the relative value of money at that time, as compared with that of the present day; in speaking of the expenses of scholars, we shall have an opportunity for further remarks on this interesting subject. We will suppose the journey safely accomplished; the entrance into Oxford, and its first view caught from the neighbouring hill, as the party ride over Shotover, down the "Horse-"path," through the thick forest, and across the moor to the east gate of the city, the first impression it creates, the challenging of the party at the gate by the sentinels,[1] the passage of the Cherwell, probably by fording, and other such details must be left to the imagination of the reader. So also must, to a very great extent, the appearance of the city itself; of the buildings now existing at Oxford, which were standing at the time we speak of, and which would strike the eye of the stranger, there were few. He would not see at his entrance the tower of Magdalen College (built about 1473), the old Hospital of St. John was then standing, and used for some years by the new College which displaced its tenants. He would, however, see the spires of S. Mary's and of old All Saints', and the tower of S. John's (Merton) churches. These, with the tower of New College, and the spire of S. Frideswide alone remain. The tower of Oseneye Abbey (of which a print can be seen in Dugdale's Monasticon, was also to be seen in the western distance. Doubtless the Masters of the several halls, to which our new scholars are to go, will be expecting their arrival, and, the horses being disposed of at the inn, their slender luggage is removed to its appointed destination.

Approach to the city.

General view of Oxford.

[1] Night-watching at the gates is mentioned in Aa. in a passage not extracted for this work.—Ed.

We would gladly linger a little on the picture fancy here presents to us, but it would be mere fancy, to so great an extent have all means of actually reproducing mediæval life perished. To mention one thing only which strikes us, and shows how utterly all details of life are lost, we can hardly conceive what must have been the effect of the arrival of so large a number of men and horses in the town as must have occurred at this time every year, how the latter were returned, or, if not, where and when sold, and whence provided again, are perhaps trivial inquiries, but they open to the thought scenes of interest and means of employment which might otherwise pass unobserved, and which, moreover, may assist us perhaps in forming a juster conception of the life we attempt to pourtray. The amount of buying and selling, for instance, necessarily attending the transactions of which we speak, and the consequent litigation likely to spring from it, may, among other things, contribute towards accounting for the great frequency and activity of law-suits of which there is evidence in the documents before us, and for which so very large a machinery existed, it would appear, at Oxford; but of this more will be said hereafter.

Busy state of the city.

Frequency of litigation.

We do not propose to watch the distribution of our party of scholars among the several halls to which they went, we will follow one, however, as well as we can; he is one of the youngest, and his case therefore will be somewhat different from those of the elder. He was to commence his education at Oxford. And to understand this matter aright, we must not any longer delay adding somewhat to our previous account of the schools. The short notice given above (p. 46) of those institutions, was meant to apply to the schools of the several higher faculties only, and of them it was by no means intended to be a complete account; besides them, there existed many other schools, for instance, every religious house had, it would appear, its own schools, in which its members performed all their academical exercises previous to inception, there were also other schools in various parts of the town, the locality of which is not known; but, besides all these, there were also schools of a wholly distinct character, the grammar schools. Of these, as of the schools of the several faculties, there were two classes; those of the University properly so called, and those of the various religious houses. So that it will be seen that each such religious house had a school for every purpose, grammar, as well as the higher faculties, to a great extent independent of the University and yet a part of it and subject to its general regulations and partaking of its privileges.

Grammar schools of two kinds.

Religious and secular.

Thus there lay an option before the friends of a youth designed for Oxford; they could either entrust him wholly to a religious house, under which circumstances he would probably be reared to swell the ranks of the regular clergy; and in this case, on his arrival in Oxford, he would go at once, under charge of a brother, to the house and be placed, if of the age we selected, under the care of the grammar master of the house, and afterwards proceed to other studies still in the same house, or he would be placed, and this was by far the commoner plan, at one of the grammar schools of the University, i.e., the secular schools. Then comes the question where and how he would live; were children destined to attend such grammar schools entered as members of one of the halls, or were they under charge of a sort of "dame;" or were the halls of two classes, some of these halls for boys at grammar schools only, and some for more advanced faculty-scholars? We have no decided evidence on this subject, but it seems most likely that the latter was the case, that, in fact, some of the halls were grammar-halls, and contained amongst their apartments a grammar school. It did not follow as a matter of course that this plan was wholly exclusive of the other, any more than it followed that, though the majority of the grammar masters were graduates, all should be so (pp. 436–9). Clearly that non-graduates should be grammar-school masters was the exception and not the rule; and it may fairly be presumed that, since the whole tenor of legislation was to bring members of the University more and more within its own supervision and control, in this case as in others the exercise of non-academical authority even over the very young would be regarded with a jealous eye by the authorities.

Graduate and non-graduate teachers.

The existence of non-graduate teachers of grammar at all seems to have arisen from a scarcity of duly qualified persons willing to undertake the office in the face of the greater attractions of logic, and of the superior faculties; hence the foundation of free grammar schools (p. 354), a species of institution then in its infancy, and encouraged by a peculiar exempting statute at Oxford. The difficulty of providing proper secular graduates for this important service, led also to the usurpation (so to speak) of grammar-school pre-eminence so notoriously acquired and exercised by the Augustine friars; who, perhaps from their success in this line, appear to have eventually succeeded in drawing to themselves with the consent of the University, nearly all the grammatical training of the place (pp. 363, 411, 749), a success the memory of which has been handed down almost to our times, at least by the familiarity of the term, in the well known name, "Austins." Whether the success of these friars as grammar teachers laid the foundation of their eminence in other branches of learning or accompanied it does not appear certain, but the statutes referred to seem to make the former probable.

A non-graduate schoolmaster selected.

We will suppose our scholar consigned to the care of a famous schoolmaster of the day (1450), apparently one of strong feelings antagonistic to the regulars. John Martyn (or Merton) kept a school in the parish of S. Michael, not far from the prison Bocardo, and in this very year during the long vacation (p. 601) he had been imprisoned in the said prison for assembling his scholars and violently tearing from the hands of the priest a sentence of excommunication at S. Mary's church; a few years after we find him quarrelling with a regular priest of S. Mary's College (Oriel) and submitting to arbitration, the sentence of which forbade him and his wife to make faces at their enemy or otherwise insult him. A strange prohibition, but apparently not unfrequently needed, for in an old MS. in the possession of Oriel College there is an account of a particular injunction to restrain one of the fellows from annoying the Provost by indulging in a similar species of insult. However, no doubt the ill blood between Master Martyn and his opponent cooled down as they discussed together the roast goose and wine, which the sentence of arbitration (p. 713) obliged them to provide and consume together in amity, not omitting beer "ad libitum sive "voluntatem," within the precincts of the college of the Blessed Virgin aforesaid; nor would either the one "fracas" or the other in the least diminish the reputation of our schoolmaster. To this protector we will conduct our scholar.

His position in the University.

Entrance and enrolment of the scholar.

The first step will be to enrol his name on the list of some master of arts, for John Martyn was not a graduate, and all scholars of non-graduate teachers were obliged to enter their names on the roll of some master of arts, a regulation the non-observance of which would deprive a scholar "tam "morte quam in vita" of all privilege and protection of the University (p. 449), and which was doubtless felt as an irksome restraint and a reminder of their academical inferiority by the non-graduate teachers, who were liable at any time to be proceeded against by any master who found them to fail in compliance. (p. 445). We need look no further for the grievance of John Martyn.

Residence in lay-houses the origin of grave disorders,

It should here be remarked that though in the earlier part of the time embraced in the present work all scholars might dwell in the houses of laymen, or at least did so, if they pleased, though not allowed, yet, at the time of which we are treating now, the exemption in favour of lay-houses can only have existed in the case of the grammar scholars; for in the year 1421 the king, alarmed at the frequent violations of the peace at Oxford, issued an ordinance (p. 277) which required all scholars and servants of years of discretion to be under some sufficient principal; and further, the University, in the year 1432, ordered that every such principal should be a graduate (p. 307); and under the same year we find similar restrictions imposed with more severity by the University; and a complaint in the preamble of the statute (p. 320) that grave crimes are committed by scholars falsely so called, who "nefando nomine chamberdekenys" live in no hall, but sleep away their days and pass their nights in riot and debauchery, crime and violence. This was an evil not eradicated, however, by royal or academical legislation; for, several years later, (pp. 563, 576) we find the same class of scholars "unattached" banished from the University for homicide. It seems indeed that the plan of living in lay-houses, in the case of elder students, was so grave an evil during all the early history of the University, that it was the subject of constant anxiety and statute-making, and doubtless was one of the chief reasons which finally led to the complete success of the collegiate system.

and source of continual trouble to the University.

But to return to our scholar;—his name is duly entered on the list of some master; next, for though it need not necessarily be done for a month after coming to Oxford (p. 277), yet it is likely it would be done almost immediately, followed the (at this time) novel ceremony of matriculation.

No control over scholars in early times.

In the early times there seems to have been positively no sort of restriction or restraint imposed on or exercised over the scholars, they dwelt where they chose and with whom, and were under no kind of obligation, beyond such as the fear of the arm of the law ecclesiastical or civil might supply, to a regular or moral life in any degree; but the intolerable licence which developed itself from this state of things, of which the reader will best form an opinion by consulting the index to the present volume under the words Scholar, Prison, Violence, and the like, gradually led to the passing, step by step, of statutes which were intended to, and did to a great extent, abate so serious an evil.

Matriculation.

His matriculation was a very simple process, for it consisted merely of an oath to keep the peace (p. 279), and, if he had a servant, the servant took the same oath (p. 664). All further oaths were reserved for a future time, the taking of each academical degree was hedged about with most stringent oaths, of which a more detailed account will be found in the proper place. The young scholar's real matriculation, or what more resembles the matriculation of more recent times, was, perhaps, his enrolment on the books of his protecting master, by which he became entitled to claim the privilege of the University.

No academical dress worn by under-graduates.

As to the dress in which the boy would appear, it did not differ from that of any other boy of his age, no academical dress being worn by non-graduate members of the privilege until very much more recent times.[1] So true is it that what is withheld as a privilege will be valued and eagerly sought, while what is enforced as a regulation will be strenuously resisted; for in our days the complaint is that the junior members of the University reject the badge of academical citizenship, while in the times we at present speak of, stringent were the statutes and severe the penalties required to restrain the ambitious sophist from inuing himself with the robes which were the sacred privilege of those only who had "climbed to the "summit of" a master's or bachelor's dignity (pp. 301, 360, 208).

All the formal steps necessary to effect membership have now been taken, and our scholar returns to his schoolmaster's house; of the details of the arrangements of such an institution we can absolutely say nothing which is certainly true, of the elder scholar's mode of life we know more, we may therefore reserve what is to be said of the "camera" or scholars' room for a time, and proceed to the first lecture.

Description of lecture room.

In the room which we will dignify with the name of school, the scholars are assembled, they sit or stand in a group around the master, without desks or, generally, books. A good illustration, of a rough and inartistic kind, of this scene in a scholar's life is probably to be seen in the rude woodcut or print, which the curious may see for themselves at the commencement of some of the earliest printed books, one, which the editor specially has in his eye, is the early edition of Boëthius' "De Consolatione Philo-

[1] Unless the scholars on the foundation of some of the earlier colleges were distinguished by a peculiar dress, which, though not certain, is not improbable.

" sophiæ," printed by the well known J. Breda, of Daventry (Anno 1490), in which will be found such a scene as we are supposing exhibited, disfigured of course by the usual absence of perspective and the grotesque angularity of figure common to mediæval art, but nevertheless sufficiently like the reality to reproduce the main features of the scene; the scholars there depicted are plainly very young; and from the mouth, or round the head of the central figure (the editor speaks from memory) runs a scroll " accipies tanti doctoris " dogmata sancti." The figure teaching doubtless is intended for Boëthius himself, but, as usual, it must be supposed that the whole conception of the print and details, so far as it has any, are derived not, of course, from his time but from those of the printer of the work.

Matter and manner of leeture.

We proceed to the matter treated of in the lecture, and here we need be in no uncertainty either as to the subject, the text books, or the mode of instruction. For the purpose of arranging the system of instruction to be pursued during the ensuing term the grammar-school masters used to hold a meeting called "convenite" at the beginning of term, and also at the end, and at other times when necessary, that they might act together in concert; a wholesome regulation which we do not find to have existed in the case of other faculties (p. 437). Every such master before being licensed to teach underwent an examination in versification, dictation, &c. (p. 436), lest, as the statute has it, the words of Isaiah should prove true "multiplicasti gentem, non auxisti lætitiam;" further, they were held to be responsible for the moral and religious training of their pupils (ibid.), "cum " oporteat singulos pro sibi commisso grege coram " tremendo Judice rationem reddere in die tribula- " tionis et miseriæ;" a provision which goes far to prove the correctness of what has been above advanced, that the boys resided in the houses of their masters.

Moral and religious instruction.

The first meeting of the scholars in the school would no doubt be for the purpose of having the statutes relating to them read and explained (p. 437). Of the subject of the lectures we are told that there was a great tendency to neglect proper formal instruction, especially in the matter of parsing, so that we find more than one statute expressly forbidding what were called "cursory" lectures (pp. 86, 439) except under certain restrictions. What these "cursory" lectures were we can only conjecture, probably they were more what we should call lectures while the "ordinary" lectures were actual lessons; in the cursory lecture the master was the sole performer, in the ordinary the scholar was heard his lesson. The most remarkable part of the statute alluded to is that it complains that teachers led by the hope of gain indulged their scholars with cursory lectures, so that it would really seem that it was not uncommon for the boys to bribe the master to excuse them their parsing! So great an evil did this prove, as well it might do, that a master so transgressing was liable to deprivation, and imprisonment for so long as the chancellor saw fit in his discretion (p. 87).

Cursory lectures.

The "positive" and formal instruction of the scholars consisted, we have seen, in great measure of parsing in Latin; Greek is never mentioned, and was never taught. The master was also obliged (p. 437) to set his scholars verses to compose, and letters to write, with express caution as to choice of words, length of clauses, and absence of metaphor, &c. (p. 438), which exercises they had to write out on parchment on the next holiday, and produce them in school and repeat them "by heart"[1] to their master on the day after. Thus we find that really very ample provisions existed for proper grammatical training. The text book used appears to have been invariably Priscian or Donatus (p. 439, 243), the rules of which were to be illustrated from authors of a proper kind, special care being taken to forbid the use of the amatory portions of Ovid and of Pamphilus,[1] and any other books whose contents "suos scholares alliceret ad "illicita vel provocaret." One other branch of instruction provided for must not be passed over unmentioned, it is that the boys should be taught to construe both in English and French, lest the latter language should be wholly forgotten. The statute in which this precaution is taken (p. 438) is unfortunately of the number of those which are of utterly uncertain date, so far as can be ascertained from the MSS., it is however not one of the ancient statutes on grammar schools, and is probably of the thirteenth century.

The French language.

It should be observed once more of the grammar masters before leaving this subject, that while we find provision made by statute for their payment by their scholars, the two superintendent masters also, whose duty it was to inspect and regulate the grammar schools, had a regular salary from the University (p. 440); the non-graduate grammar teacher's salary was also limited (p. 439), and they were obliged to make an annual payment to the University, as it would seem for the privilege of teaching, and the sum so collected (p. 440) was divided among the superintendents, at least such would appear to be the meaning of the statute, which is somewhat obscurely worded; and not seldom there was great difficulty in collecting these dues, for we find (p. 563) in the year 1447 three such teachers threatened with excommunication for withholding payment. This exaction of a tax from the schoolmasters seems to point once more to the conclusion already stated that the masters lived by keeping boarding schools, and were paid in a different way from, and in a more remunerative way than the teachers of the other faculties, to which we must now proceed.

Duration of grammatical training.

No maximum limit (p. 286) seems to have been prescribed to the time which would be spent in the previous grammatical training above sketched, nor is there any reason to suppose that there practically existed any limit, beyond that which convenience would impose, either to the age at which boys commenced, or at which they relinquished the work of elementary education; as a matter of convenience and custom they would be generally of the age we have presumed, and we may suppose that from two to four years would be the ordinary duration of their schooling, while on the other hand, some would enter considerably later and therefore finish also later. Again, a large number of students would not have studied grammar at all at Oxford, but would have prepared themselves elsewhere.

Age at which the regular course of an Artist would commence.

Allowing, then, for the variety of the means for previous training, we shall see that the age at which the real University course would commence will have varied very much; we may set it down as from the twelfth to the fifteenth or sixteenth year; and again there were very considerable numbers of students who graduated without ever passing regularly through the academical course, and who were allowed to count "pro forma" exercises and studies undergone elsewhere; numerous instances of which will be found in the extracts from the register of Convocation (A a) in this work.

Commencement of course.

But having premised thus much, by way of opinion rather than fact, as to the age of scholars, we will now follow our scholar in his next stage. He has completed his grammar school life and is now to enter upon his course of training as an "Artist." He will therefore have to be transferred to a hall or college, (but as the latter were at present exclusively for limited foundations, the former will be the ordinary course), and thus be placed under the supervision of a principal. He has no great distance to walk to the famous Broadgate's Hall,[1] in All Saints parish, presided over at this time by one Master William Sprig. This was a famous hall and enjoyed the valuable privilege of sanctuary, so that on one occasion, a few years later, an unfortunate tailor (p. 703) having wounded another in a brawl fled hither for refuge, and defied the power of the proctor by whom he was hotly pursued.

Broadgate's hall.

We will take leave to accompany our scholar into the hall, he is introduced into the study of the principal there, to have his name duly enrolled; while this ceremony is going on we will take the opportunity of looking round the study of Master Sprig;—it does not reach our notions of ordinary comfort, but it is a fair specimen of the class (p. 515). It is a small room without, of course, any covering on the floor, and not overstocked with furniture. The first thing that strikes the eye is, that hanging against the wall there are to be seen several articles which appear hardly consistent with our notions of academical life,—a bow, and twenty arrows arranged near; a sword, two baslards or daggers, an axe, an old guitar, and a lute; knives too of considerable ornament he possessed; on the floor is the usual chest locked,[2] the equivalent for modern cupboards and drawers; one chair, and it seems, one only was the usual stock, though occasionally we find "formulæ" mentioned, probably for scholars to sit on at the lectures (p. 545), from which we may conclude that the principal's study was his lecture room also; there is one three-legged table, and one desk to read at, and an old shelf, some wooden dishes, a pestle and mortar, a brass pitcher, and a pair of bellows, an article generally to be found in such apartments, for the occupant had the privilege of a fire, and apparently did a little cooking for himself (p. 704); these complete the furniture. Of books there are not many, Boëthius, Super libro Porphyrii, the commentary of Boëthius on the prædicaments; Ovid, "De remedio "amoris;" liber geometriæ, probably in most cases we should add a few books on law, canon or civil, or on theology, which with a prayer book (portiforium), would be found to complete the library (p. 545). There is nothing to hinder us from prying even into his bed-room (camera, p. 545). He is well provided with blankets, and bed-room.

he has four, some of them very heavy it would seem, for these are very valuable, appraised at twenty pence each, one coverlet of "say," four cloths of the same material, for what use is not so clear, one doublet of white cloth, one pair of boots, one red gown trimmed with fur, another lividi coloris similarly trimmed, one red hood, a tabard, and a white cloak. This is his whole property, as it would seem,—bedstead and crockery may have belonged to the house and not to the person,—but the list is suggestive of some personal conveniences in the way of linen, and so forth, which are desiderated both Lack of linen.
in this and in most other such inventories, except in the case of towels ("manitergia") and sheets, ("linte-"amina") which we constantly find bequeathed along with other valuables by testators (see under Wills). In the case, however, of one scholar Master Dreff (p. 582–4), the list of whose goods and chattels is perhaps the most complete we have, and is well worth inspection, "una camisia" occurs among other items, and again "tres camisiæ, cum quatuor braccis." The fondness Fondness for colour.
for colour so conspicuous in the dress of the period, extended itself even to the bed-cover or "helyng" (a word almost peculiar to Oxford as it would seem from the Promptuarium), an article which seems to have been frequently green (p. 583), sometimes of blue and red (p. 579), sometimes "ypowdr" or "flowryd."

Tastes of the period.

The inventories of scholars' rooms must not occupy our space any further, they will repay an examination in detail, suggesting hints as they constantly do as to the tastes and occupations as well as studies of the owners, once or twice we find a pet bird, several times a musical instrument, among books often occur "primers," and among other miscellaneous items the occurrence of rosaries, spurs, snuffers, and many other things in daily use, seems to bring us almost to a real acquaintance with the owners.

The scholar's room.

Our scholar is now, however, fairly entered of the hall, and we must next settle him in his "camera," and here a difficulty meets us which we have no direct evidence to solve; it does not appear whether the ordinary scholar had a separate set of apartments to himself; there is reason however to think that this was not a matter regulated by any invariable rule; as a general rule it may be taken for granted that he had one room only, which served for bedroom and study, so far as he required a study, for in the case only of those whom we know to have been masters, or principals of halls, do we find different statements of the contents of the "studium" and the "camera." From the frequent valuation of the contents of these rooms it may reasonably be inferred that the practice at the present day of taking the furniture of a room at a valuation from the previous tenant has descended to our times from very remote antiquity; one of the few things that have so descended; for, in spite of the general opinion to the contrary, Oxford of the present day contains both in outward appearance and in inward management scarcely anything that is old, or which while retaining an old name or an old place has not lost its original meaning or its original appearance altogether.

Manner of life of scholar.

The details already given or referred to will enable us to furnish our scholar's room for him; we must now give a few minutes to the mode of passing time which would probably be the ordinary life of the student. In the first place, as to the hours of rising, meals, and retiring to rest; it would seem that not later than 7 o'clock can be assigned for the first, for lectures began at 9 o'clock (p. 240), as we may conclude from the hours prescribed for the exercises of the determining bachelors, and continued until 12 o'clock; then dinner followed, and after that the exercises were resumed from 1 o'clock until 5; but this was during Lent, and was peculiar no doubt to the exercises at that season, in all probability ordinary lectures were not continued so long, nor nearly, although on full reading days there would be lectures in the afternoon as well as the morning, the leisure hours being provided for by the large number of festivals and "other "non-legible" or half-legible days.

Hours of breakfast, dinner, and lectures.

Attendance at divine worship.

On one important subject we are strangely enough wholly without information of a direct kind; whether any regular attendance at divine service was required or not from the junior members of the University. There is no statute requiring it, but as to graduates, many statutes provide that they must attend without exception, and the omission of any mention of the juniors would seem to imply that it was taken for granted they should accompany their masters. The halls, so far as we know,[1] were not usually provided with chapels, those existing in halls at present standing being of comparatively recent erection; the religious houses of course had their own chapels for their scholars, as also had the colleges, but the ordinary students must have had ample provision for their presence in the numerous parish churches of the town (p. 89), which we know from several scattered notices were the objects of particular regard to the scholars; thus determination used to take place in them until it was forbidden (p. 245), and the scholars were in the habit of celebrating the festival days of the patron saints of their several churches, dancing disguised with masks and crowned with garlands of leaves and flowers, a practice, which, originating in the "esprit de corps" of the several nations, gave rise to frequent riots and violation of the peace, and was very early attempted to be repressed by penal statutes (p. 18). Of this division of the University into nations many notices will be found in the documents before us (pp. 20, 22, 92, 283, 305, 462), and so violent was the animosity between the Northern and Southern scholars that it was necessary that one of the proctors should always be a South and the other a North country man.[1] It will be observed also that dissensions not less violent or frequent occurred with the Irish and Welsh scholars, and the reader will find occasional traces which lead to the conclusion that the halls were in many cases national, a presumption which will afford a clue to the violence of the quarrels which often occurred between them (p. 725, 734, 714, 590).

But we must return to the daily life of the scholar. Although no mention is made of daily devotions, the whole spirit of the University forbids us to suppose they were not compulsory, these, therefore, and breakfast over, our scholar commences the studies of the day. As we have seen before, the lectures were of two kinds, some given by the principal of the hall, others by the masters of the several faculties in the several schools. It will be almost certain that the former were preparatory (p. 242), and subsidiary to the latter; perhaps, though not generally, yet sometimes a master of a school may have likewise been principal of a hall; as a rule we may conclude that his time would be too fully employed in his hall to admit of his presiding also at school. What has been said above of the grammar lessons will be equally applicable to all lectures in the halls, mutatis mutandis as to age, &c.

Lectures in school,

The lectures in the schools present several different features, and before we describe them we must say a few words on the means of acquiring books available by the scholars. The stock of books possessed by the younger scholars seems to have been almost nil. The inventories of goods, which we possess, in the case of non-graduates contain hardly any books. The fact is that they mostly could not afford to buy them, and, had they been able, would not have found the advantage so considerable as might be supposed, the instruction given being almost wholly oral. The chief source of supplying books was by purchase from the University sworn stationers, who had to a great extent a monopoly (p. 233), the object of which was to prevent the sale and removal from Oxford of valuable books. Of such books there were plainly very large numbers constantly changing hands; they were the pledges so continually deposited on borrowing from chests, and seem, from scattered hints, to have been a very fruitful source of litigation and dispute. But these remarks apply to the senior members of the University, the numerous Masters of Arts who were lecturing or proceeding towards superior degrees in theology, canon and civil law, and medicine, and not to the artists. Having none themselves the scholars used to carry the books of their master to the school (p. 743) a service for which they were rewarded by a grace dispensing with a portion of their studies, in fact by a holiday; from the special provision that the master might have a desk we may infer that the scholars stood round him (p. 422), for what is forbidden, as to such a privilege, in the case of a bachelor would be still less likely to be granted to a sophist. We see the class then standing round the master, who was in full academical costume; this consisted of a black cape, boots, (p. 478), hood, whether a gown was worn at lectures does not appear, but in walking in public it was necessary (p. 301) and probably therefore at lectures. The lecture consists entirely of oral instruction, hence the scholar is always said "audire lectiones," "respondere "quæstioni," "auditioni textus insistere," &c. (p. 410, 242,) and after hearing long enough, along with such other practice as he could obtain, he was obliged to repeat what he had learnt (p. 243). It was required that the scholar should spend four years in the studies preliminary to the bachelor's degree (p. 410), and this period was divided into two parts, during the first portion the scholar was called "sophista generalis," and he might not present himself for "responsions" befor the expiration of one year at the least (p. 242). All the statutes preserved to us are very difficult to understand, and often contradictory to each other: among other things which it seems impossible to determine with certainty, we do not find it stated distinctly what were the subjects of examination at responsions as distinct from those at determination (p. 242–3), we know indeed that four years were necessarily to be spent in the study of logic, rhetoric, grammar and arithmetic, and perhaps music, (though it is not clear as to the latter, whether it belonged wholly to the studies after determination (i. e. the bachelor's degree) or whether a portion of the time spent in the study was taken during the four years of the sophist's training (p. 286)), but we can only form the very natural conjecture that the more elementary parts of these formed the subjects of examination at responsions. Nor again do we find any regulations as to the appointment of the masters who officiated as examiners at responsions. To construct a theory[1] here is easier, as usual, than to put together such materials as are at hand with truth; one thing we know,—that the exercise we speak of took place in the "parvise" a name which has descended to our times, and we may be sure that the examination consisted of question and answer on the subjects above mentioned, and that the candidates for examination attended at disputations in the parvise (p. 242) continually during term by way of preparation. The oath of the sophist that he had duly fulfilled these exercises was, so far as appears, the only security for their performance, except the obvious guarantee afforded by publicity and fear of detection.

Sophist, questionist, &c.

Until responsions were past the scholar was called "sophista generalis," afterwards he acquired the name of "questionist"; and on the occasion of responding great were the festivities and consequent expenses (p. 410), so that it was found necessary on one occasion for the chancellor to limit them to sixteen pence (p. 684).

Festivals at Responsions.

Supposing our scholar to have attended his necessary lectures with his own principal from 9 to 10 o'clock, one in rhetoric and one in logic at the schools, we shall have brought him to the dinner hour; this over, lectures were resumed, or disputations, in later times from 1 to 3 o'clock and probably this was the case at the date of which we write. Thus we shall find that a large portion of the day is disposed of; but here we must pause awhile to mention some of the experiences of the scholar probably in his lecture hours; we pass over the calling over of the roll which would probably take place, and suppose Experiences at lecture.

[1] A more detailed account of this part of the academical course will be found in Ayliffe's history; he gives a tolerably clear statement of what took place in his day (1720), but how far it can be taken as explanatory of our difficulty the reader must consider for himself.—Ed.

the master and scholars deep in the mysteries of Priscian, Donatus, or the like, almost certainly the school door will be opened and an official will present himself, perhaps this time it will be the bedel, he has come to summon a scholar before the chancellor, for last night he was discovered in the act of violently carrying off beer from a taverner (p. 506) who was bearing it to Pek-water Inn, and with several associates, was pursued and arrested, and only escaped instant imprisonment through the intervention of his protecting master (p. 17). The confusion in the school is not so great as might be anticipated, on most days a scholar is "wanted" in the school in this way, either one of them has been fighting in the street (pp. 529, 593) or he has been one of an assaulting party who attacked a rival hall (p. 725) or he has been one of a party who united to take vengeance on an obnoxious tailor (p. 634) ; but no one in this school answers the name or description of the scholar wanted, so the bedel goes on to another school of older scholars, for he of whom he is in search has been guilty of an enormous crime, he has frequently been fined (p. 529), to the extreme limit allowed by the statute, for wearing a dagger, more than once he has been excommunicated for violence, and now he has shot at the proctor walking the streets by night (pp. 734, 596, 13, 632). He is at length discovered in his school, having been liberated on bail the preceding evening, and now accompanies the bedel to the lodging of the chancellor's commissary, Master John Beck, rector of Lincoln College (p. 647). A large number of scholars accompany him, not a few seem inclined to attempt a rescue, but the idea is abandoned and only two companions enter the lodgings with him (pp. 317, 457). The chancellor's commissary, and proctors are all armed, as a careful observer may see, for the hilt of a dagger is discernible at their girdles (p. 355). The particulars of the evidence are taken, and the offence being grave and aggravated by previous delinquences, the culprit is instantly banished from Oxford for ever (pp. 470, 576, &c.). The disturbance in the schools occasioned by this incident has hardly subsided when another bedel makes his appearance, he reads in a loud voice a proclamation in Latin, warning the scholars against transgression of the statutes (p. 16), or that a sale of pledges from one of the chests will take place on the following day, and perhaps reminds the scholars of the opportunity they will have of purchasing such and such books. On another occasion the door of each school will be successively thrown open and the chaplain of the University in full canonicals will enter, and kneeling down read aloud a form of prayers, in which the scholars devoutly join, for the souls of all pious benefactors departed (pp. 335, 343, &c.). These must have been the ordinary events of every term, and some of them of almost every day.

Prayers for founders and benefactors.

At the commencement of every Michaelmas term there was, we must not fail to notice, a celebration of high mass at St. Mary's Church "de S. Spiritu" "ut "Dominus per Sui gratiam ingressum suum instruat, "&c." (p. 499), and a similar mass at the close of each academical year, at both of which solemnities every master was of course present, and we may suppose the Church would be crowded with scholars too; of the musical and other accompaniments of the service we have no account, but it is not unlikely there was an organ, (p. 674), for we know there was one at All Souls' College about this time, and provision was made that nothing should be wanting in the way of suitable vestments for so sacred an occasion (p. 154), and for the decorous behaviour of the masters attending during the service (p. 312). Our limited space forbids us to do more than just glance at these solemnities, and only some of them can be mentioned here at all. Under their proper heads in the index and table of contents other similarly interesting ceremonies will be found.

Music at divine service.

The examination at responsions having been duly passed, the scholar has now taken his first step towards graduation, and, supposing him to have responded during his second year, there will remain two full years or more, according to the time at which he entered, to be spent in the studies necessary before determination or the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The books to be used for this examination have already been specified, and, as we there stated, it is probable that grammar and arithmetic formed the chief, if not the only subjects of examination at responsions, leaving for determination the subjects of rhetoric, music, and logic; of these, logic was by far the most important (pp. 246, 446), and at times during the history of the University became so prevailing a subject of study that it almost wholly overshadowed and displaced the preliminary work of the study of grammar. It was undoubtedly from the superior importance attached to logical studies that the name "determination" took its rise, the examination for the bachelor's degree consisting mainly of questions to be determined by the candidate, and not from the circumstance that he then completed or determined his course, which was so far from being the case, that in fact he might be more properly said to commence his real studies at this time. Determination is described with more particularity than responsions, so that we shall be able to follow our scholar with more certainty through this part of his academical course. We will suppose, then, that it is Ash Wednesday of his second year after responsions (p. 244), for either on this day or some day between it and the following Tuesday, determination must commence. At 9 o'clock, the great bell of St. Mary's Church begins to sound, (p. 280) all the 32 schools in School Street are occupied by their several masters sitting in full academical dress, and with their desks before them awaiting the arrival of the scholars; for it has been ordered (p. 245) that the exercises must take place in these schools, and not either in the privacy of dwelling houses (p. 239) or in the churches. There will have been the natural difficulty in selecting the master in whose school the scholar shall make his "debut," for, although statutes were passed from time to time (p. 442) to prevent unfairness in the questions proposed and in the manner of conducting the examination (p. 246), this or that master would of course, have the reputation of being an easier examiner than another, so that the determiner would have a better opportunity of passing with credit; for the examiner was attended by others besides those concerned, and as we find it was forbidden (p. 246) to drag passers by into the schools on those occasions, it seems to be clear that, either by fair means or by foul, either by the attractions offered by display of learning and adroit argumentation, or by forcible means, those interested in the success of a particular master made every effort to procure a creditable audience, at least in respect of numbers. The scholar would also find that other and even less reputable considerations would have their effect in determining his choice of a master; for, though no fee appears to have been contemplated or recognized as the legitimate reward of the masters on these occasions, yet the perquisites they made were plainly very considerable; it is provided that no robes or other gifts (pp. 445, 454) may be given by the candidates to the masters, and again this statute was shortly afterwards repealed, so that we may conclude it was found impossible, and perhaps unadvisable also, to prevent the acceptance of such remuneration; some masters would be in the habit of accepting more valuable gifts than others; again, the companions our scholar would have in his determination, would probably form a sort of clique or club to arrange the customary festivities, by which, in spite of statutes to the contrary, and notwithstanding the unseasonablenesss of their occurrence in Lent (p. 453), thenewly admitted bachelors were wont to exhibit their joy. The time, the place, the amount to be spent on such occasions would all be settled long before, and no doubt the ties of relationship and nationality would not fail to exert their powerful influence in attracting scholars to join in patronizing the school of a particular master, and afterwards in celebrating together the attainment of their new honour by a festival conducted according to the customs of their country and the contents of their purse. Supposing a scholar to have arrived at the time in his academical course at which he might determine, his first step was to obtain the testimony of at least six Masters of Arts as to his fitness both in knowledge, morals, age, and even stature and personal appearance (pp. 243, 246) ; and these six masters had to give their testimony on oath in congregation, and were not allowed to reveal to any one the nature of the testimony given by them (p. 426) ; of the sufficiency of their testimony four regent Masters of Arts were chosen to decide, two north and two south country men, every year in congregation eight days before Ash Wednesday, on which day, as before stated, determination commenced : they received the testimony of the masters, who, with the scholars in whose behalf they appeared, presented themselves for that purpose before the said committee of four, either on the Sunday, Monday, or Tuesday before Ash Wednesday (p. 242) ; and then, if their testimony was accepted, the scholars made oath that they had completed the necessary studies and had responded in due form : if all these preliminaries were safely passed, the candidate was then said to be "admitted" to determine. It was in the danger, therefore, of not being able to provide proper testimony of this kind, or of not being able to take the necessary oath as to past studies, that the chance of failure consisted ; there seems to have been nothing corresponding to our modern "plucking;" if the scholar could provide testimony to his fitness, &c., he was admitted to run the gauntlet of determining without further inquiry, and his successful or non-successful performance brought with it the consequent applause or disgrace, which seems to have been the only guarantee that he should really exert himself. Some of the provisions of the statutes on this subject are unintelligible, at least to the editor, for instance, those which provide for the division of the determiners into two companies (p. 240) and again the distinction between those who determine "pro se" and "pro aliis." Can it be the case that more proficient scholars were allowed to dispute for others, and wealthier for those that were poorer? It would seem so,—at least that wealthier masters incepted for poorer is plain (p. 731). If this was the case, and practised to any extent, (and the editor believes this to have been so,) then the division of the determiners into two portions becomes less difficult to understand; for the number of actual disputants would thus not be so very numerous: and thus they might in turn go round to all the 32 schools, replying to the questions proposed by each master in his turn (p. 453), and yet be able to complete the whole course within nine days; a minimum limit, which, however, might be exceeded, and doubtless often was so by the more proficient candidates, who would continue to go from school to school exhibiting their logical powers perhaps for weeks, concluding always, however, by the end of term (pp. 240, 244). Nine days of disputation, from 9 o'clock till 12 a.m., and again from 1 o'clock till 5 p.m., must have been indeed a serious test. It is almost needless, perhaps, to say that the whole process was entirely vivâ voce, written examinations being apparently never even thought of, and practically next to impossible in those days, in no small degree from the paucity of materials for manuscript exercise, and the scanty accommodation in the schools. Each candidate in his turn stood up before the master, who proceeded to pose him if he could,

(p. 246), subject, however, to the interference and control of the Proctors and Chancellor (pp. 246, 422, &c.); or the candidates disputed in pairs by turns, corrected and called to order by the presiding master. Such, or nearly such, seems to have been the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After this exercise no oath appears to have been exacted, no license or degree conferred; but the bachelor, after completion of the exercises, was at liberty to proceed to the necessary studies previous to the degree of Master of Arts, of which we must now proceed to speak.

Privileges conferred by a bachelor's degree.

Determination, or, if it may be called a degree, the degree of Bachelor of Arts, conferred as an ordinary rule no privileges beyond the wearing of a hood; although, in rare instances, we find that occasionally Bachelors of Arts were allowed to lecture, and even hold the office of Principal of a Hall (p. 528). As we have already seen, a Bachelor of Arts might be of almost any age from 14 or 15 years to two or three and twenty; and in some cases of advanced years and fitness in other respects, there would be no objection to the granting of such unusual indulgences; but in the great majority of cases a bachelor continued, as his age would imply, to all intents and purposes "in statu pupillari" attending the regular lectures of his principal in hall and his masters in the schools until he had completed the course necessary for inception. This course continued for three full years, and the subjects of study may be seen to have been mainly geometry, astronomy, and natural, moral, and metaphysical philosophy, and especially the three last-mentioned subjects (pp. 142, 286). The text books used were Euclid, Al Hasan, Tholomæus (Almajesti), and Aristotle, through the medium of Latin translations (p. 286). In order to secure proper instruction in these various studies, as also in those for the degree of bachelor, an arrangement was made (p. 287) by which it was provided that lectures in the several subjects should be always going on, during full term, in the schools; the masters being divided into ten courses as nearly equal in number as possible, each course having to lecture on one subject, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy, and the three philosophies above named. Restrictions were further laid upon the lecturers, both as to the books they must use and the method of treatment they must pursue (p. 288): first, they might only use the text books allowed by statute; next, they must in lecturing first proceed to read the text to their scholars, then explain it with remarks upon noteworthy passages; and lastly, raise points for discussion, being careful, however, while so doing, to discuss only such questions as might naturally arise from the text, in order that no prohibited science might be incidentally taught.

Lectures in the various subjects.

Treatment of subjects at lectures.

It will be apparent from what has been already stated, that the course of education in arts was confined almost exclusively to such studies as are adapted to the intellectual strengthening of the student; of literary study or the cultivation of scholarship there is positively no trace whatever; the aim proposed was so to prepare the mind as to enable the student to be better fitted for the study of the higher faculties of law, medicine, and theology; or, supposing him not to proceed beyond arts, to provide him with such an intellectual training as would fit him for ordinary life, without any attempt at the cultivation of taste. Thus the course of mental training at mediæval Oxford consisted in disputation and the display of logical acumen to an overwhelming extent, at least up to the degree of Master of Arts.

The object aimed at in studies prescribed.

A few minutes must now however be given to a description of the process by which this degree was attained. What has been already said of the lectures of younger students will apply in the main features to those after the degree of bachelor; once more, therefore, we must suppose our scholar to have passed the necessary three years after determination in the previous preparation, and to be ready to offer himself for his inception, in other words his master's degree. The first step to be taken is to obtain a master to present the bachelor to the Chancellor and Proctors; this done, the master presenting has to make oath before them that he believes the candidate fit in morals and learning (p. 378); but this is far from being sufficient; it is further required that testimony shall be borne, by at least fourteen masters for every candidate (p. 424), nine of whom must depose that they certainly know, and five that they believe him to be fit in morals, learning, &c., and this testimony the Chancellor cannot dispense with (ibid.). This requirement being complied with, the candidate appears, presented by his master and accompanied by his testimony, before the Chancellor and Proctors in congregation, and there kneeling before him and them, and laying his hand upon the bible, makes oath that he will keep the statutes, &c., that he will actually incept within a year, that he will not spend more than a specified sum at his inception (p. 283), and that he will neither lecture himself nor hear lectures of others at Stamford, that he will use the books in the library with care (p. 375), together with other particulars, which the reader will find on reference. After having made these numerous promises, the candidate receives licence from the Chancellor in solemn form (p. 383), and with this the formal requisites for the degree of Master of Arts are complete. What was really meant by the degree of Master of Arts is not quite so clear as may be supposed; it is probably generally supposed by those who have some knowledge of the subject, that it conferred the privilege of using certain books, or rather of pursuing certain studies. This was undoubtedly the case as to those who intended to proceed to degrees in superior faculties, but as to the great majority such a permission would merely be useless, for they proceeded to no higher degree; it is to the necessary forms previous to.

Privileges conferred by the Master of Arts degree.

be observed, therefore, that the degree of Master in Arts conferred also, and this was practically its chief value, the right of lecturing, and therefore of receiving money for lectures, at Oxford.

That this privilege was the main object of those who sought the degree of Master of Arts there is little doubt; they lectured for a time, not less than one complete year besides the remainder of that year in which they incepted (p. 419), and then either proceeded to higher degrees, or, in the majority of cases, continued lecturing at Oxford, or betook themselves to more active life, generally as priests, in other parts of the country. The uncertainty as to the privilege conferred by the degree of Master of Arts arises from the ambiguity of the word "legere," "admitto te ad legendum," &c., of which it may suffice to observe that, throughout the documents here printed, the word "legere" is almost, if not quite, always used in the sense of giving lectures; for studying the usual term is "audire," "auditioni textus insistere," &c. With respect to the expenses attending the taking of a Master's degree, it should be here mentioned that the regular fee paid by the candidate on receiving license from the Chancellor was, as it is expressed, "integra communa," and in the case of a bachelor on his admission "dimidia communa;" that is to say, in more modern parlance, a whole and a half "commons." We have, however, no certain statement of the amount of this sum, but its probable value will appear from the following remarks. The word "communa" originally meant the common purse of the society living together: members of the same hall are called "communarii;" a certain official of the chapter of Wells Cathedral is called "communarius" (p. 650), apparently a sort of bursar, or perhaps steward; and in the early statutes for W. of Durham's scholars the allowance for each scholar or fellow is not to exceed twelve pence a week,

Fees payable on inception.

that is for expenses of food, &c., for he had a separate allowance for room-rent, and servants. In determining therefore the amount of the fees paid by bachelors and masters on taking their degree, the only difficulty is to decide whether the "communa" paid by them was the sum equivalent to the expenses of one week, or of one term, or of a year; it may be safely assumed, however, that it was the value of one week's expenses, i.e., in the case of a bachelor sixpence, in that of a master one shilling (p. 469). This, however, was but a very small part of the expense attending inception, a ceremony of which a more particular account must not longer be delayed. On receiving license from the Chancellor as above described, inception followed usually almost immediately, and could not be deferred longer than a year without incurring the necessity of a fresh license, with all its concomitant difficulties. It is not a little remarkable that, while we find that a special season of the year was appointed for determination, a comparatively insignificant event, inception seems to have taken place at any time: perhaps the great excitement attending even the inception of a single inceptor may have been a sufficient reason for not desiring the concurrence of many such events on the same day or at the same season. His inception was then the culminating point of the scholar's life, the day on which, probably more than on any other day in his life, he started on the road to success and renown, or sunk into the ordinary rank and file of his class. His first object was to have provided himself with a school in which to make his appearance before his audience (p. 415); this, of course, will have been an object of his solicitude for a long time; probably for months, not improbably for years, he may have secured beforehand some favourite room is School-street, and with the hiring of such accommodation the heavy expenses of his degree commence. In the next place he must have purchased, unless he has been so fortunate as to have them bequeathed to him (p. 651), the necessary articles of academcial costume, without which he could not present himself in his school: the dress in which he appeared (p. 434) was that of ordinary masters lecturing, and the prices of the several articles may be seen enumerated on reference (p. 382), with the exception of the "Pynsons," a sort of boot or shoe, the price of which we do not find (p. 450). These necessaries being duly provided, his next duty is to go round to the school of every master (p. 433), and humbly request him to honour him by his presence on the occasion. But the most serious expense was the providing of a decent suit, of what nature exactly we are not informed, for all those invited to attend: this was no doubt an intolerable burden (p. 435), and statutes were passed limiting the recipients of such favours to the relations or near kindred, or members of the same hall; and it was, in all probability, the desire to avoid this and other expenses, to be presently mentioned, which led to the practice of incepting "for others": a system which could not but have had ill consequences, since a wealthy clerk would by these means obtain an opportunity of distinguishing himself; while others less wealthy, but perhaps more learned, would, from lack of means to defray the necessary charges, pass with the mere dumb show of personal attendance. In addition to the expenses already mentioned, every inceptor was obliged to present the bedels with a gratuity of twenty shillings and a pair of buckskin gloves; and if he possessed an income of forty pounds a year he was also required to give a feast to all the Regent Masters, or in default forfeit a sum of twenty marks to the University (p. 354). Space will not permit us to detail the several regulations as to the inception of religious; but it may suffice to say that special care was taken that no burden borne by secular inceptors should fall less lightly upon them (pp. 220, 355), and to refer the reader to the index of this work for further particulars. The inceptor then, having duly performed the above necessary duties, appeared in his school, a youth surrounded by his seniors, all arranged in special order regulated by statute for the seemly conduct of the solemnity (pp. 405, 477), and commenced a series of lectures, readings, or disputations, selecting, as it would seem, his own subjects, within the limits of the books prescribed, which he was obliged to continue for that year and another whole year (p. 419), forty days of which were to be occupied by disputations (p. 430). Of course it is to be presumed that the audience would fall away or increase according to circumstances, and would depend on the attractions offered by the inceptor. Whether the course of lectures by inceptors in this their first year could be attended by ordinary scholars and count "pro formâ" we are not informed. Of the festivals, with which this ceremony of inception was ushered in, and the scenes of riot and disorder inseparable from them, frequent notices occur; it would appear that they were held either in the hall to which the inceptor belonged, or sometimes in tents (p. 308), and the several guests had their seats assigned them by no less a person than the Chancellor himself, according to their rank in the University. It was considered necessary moreover to provide by statute that free ingress and egress should be allowed during the feast to those entitled to be present, and that none should assail them while engaged in their festival by throwing stones at the roof, or battering the doors, or other similar violent attentions.

The meaning of the word "inception."

regulations for conducting them.

It will be proper here, in connection with the subject of lectures of inceptors, to inquire into the meaning of the terms Regent and Non-Regent Masters. At the present time Regency is almost a nominal distinction, and what the true difference was seems very difficult to ascertain. The expression "regere "scholas Oxoniæ," of frequent occurrence, leads to the opinion that a Regent Master was one who actually held a school in grammar or any other faculty either at Oxford or at any other "studium generale"; and a non-Regent, one who had passed through that necessary probation. If this was the meaning of the term, then it would seem probable that the exercises of the inceptor, which lasted as we have seen for nearly two years, were in fact the lectures which constituted him a Regent Master, and that during the time in which he was obliged to complete them he was called by that name, and not afterwards, even though he might continue to lecture for his own purposes at his discretion for as long as he pleased. We know that non-Regents were obliged to attend congregation at the summons of the bedel to make a "quorum" if needed, and this seems to make the above explanation probable, for, not being engaged in the work of lecturing, they might fairly be presumed at leisure to attend the business of the University.

We have now conducted the scholar through his academical course to his degree of Master of Arts, and here we must take leave of the studies of the University with a few additional observations on the other faculties. And first it should be noticed that the ceremony of inception was not confined to the faculty of Arts; we read continually of inceptors in grammar (pp. 440, 443). This faculty was inferior to all the others, and those who incepted in it were allowed to do so without many of the formalities required of other inceptors, and, it would seem, need not have passed through the previous academical training at all, but before license had to undergo an examination as to their fitness for the office of instructor in their intended department (pp. 87, 436, 440). The faculty of Arts was the mainstay, and its members composed the bulk of the members of the Superior faculties:

Supremacy of the faculty of Arts.

University, the majority proceeding, as has before been observed, to no superior degree. But supposing a Master of Arts to be desirous of devoting himself to the pursuit of the higher branches of learning, he found himself with the option before him of graduating in Civil or Canon Law, Medicine, or lastly and chiefly Theology, or, as it was afterwards called, Divinity. In each of these faculties, which were built, so to speak, on the solid foundation of graduation in Arts, he would find a course of studies before him prescribed by statute, with accompanying exercises to be performed previous to the attainment of each degree, corresponding exactly to the several studies and exercises required previous to graduation in Arts. Thus, he would have to respond, dispute, and determine either in Law, Medicine, or Theology, whichever he might select, before receiving license in any of those faculties; and finally he would incept, each of which, in the steps leading to the last degree, was an exact resemblance of the several steps in the faculty of Arts. The final degree in each was that of Master; thus, one who had graduated first in Arts, and afterwards proceeded to the same degree in Theology, was called Master of Theology, or sometimes Doctor, a distinction without a difference, Master indicating the highest degree in that particular faculty to which the person in question belonged. It has been said that the faculty of Arts was the large majority of the University; it was also supreme, and this supremacy was most carefully guarded: the right of deliberating on every subject before it was brought before Congregation was secured to them, and jealously maintained (pp. 117, 187, 331, 491), and without their consent no act of the University was held to be valid (p. 429); nor was it of any avail that a majority of faculties voted for any measure, unless a numerical majority of all Masters collectively were found to support it (p. 323).

Correspondence of the forms in the superior faculties with those previous to inception in Arts.

A few observations have been promised on the expenses of an University course at the time we speak of; we will now glance, somewhat hastily of necessity, at this subject. In the first place we may affirm without hesitation that no fee whatever was required to be paid on entrance or matriculation; so far as hindrance from this cause is concerned the scholar was unfettered; he came to Oxford and entered any hall he had reason to prefer. In the halls the expenses would doubtless vary according to the style of the members; but to take an average case, and such, we may suppose, are the cases which we shall appeal to for our facts, the expenses of an ordinary scholar may be thus reckoned in the fifteenth century. First, his "commons" or "batels" would seem to have cost him from eightpence to one shilling a week, seldom more (p. 469). Next, for the rent of his "camera" or room, supposing him to have a separate apartment, it appears that he would pay to the Principal of his hall about two shillings and sixpence a term; this sum, at any rate, was the actual charge in the case of "Athelstane Hall," in the year 1446 (p. 555), and we may infer that it was about the usual amount, for in another instance we find a clerk (in this case a priest, and therefore of mature age and probably decently lodged) paying four shillings for room and lectures (p. 664), and we are further confirmed in our estimate by finding (p. 655) that Master Richard Browne, Archdeacon of Rochester, a considerable pluralist, and, as appears from his will, a wealthy man, paid, for his room in Lincoln College, thirteen shillings and fourpence for a year's rent; a sum, which, allowing for the presumably superior accommodation he would require, will correspond fairly with the previously named charges. For lectures the necessary outlay is not quite so certainly ascertainable, but we can form a tolerably just estimate from the following data. Every Master was, we know, obliged by statute to enforce the payment of his salary from his scholars (p. 427); this payment took "collections," place at the end of term, and was called "collection" (pp. 129, 236), a name which, now applied in a wholly different sense, has often puzzled the curious as to its original meaning. This "collection," then, levied by each master lecturing, varied according to the subject taught; for lectures in grammar the statutable payment was eightpence for each term, for logic threepence, for natural philosophy fourpence (p. 427); reckoning four terms (which was the usual mode) to the year. These are the only subjects for lectures in which we find regular payments specified in the documents before us; with regard to the higher faculties, we find from one instance, canon law (p. 401), the payment for lectures in them was at a very much higher ratio, but, in accordance with our plan, the detailed inquiry into these must be omitted. As to the other subjects, in which the ordinary student in Arts would require lectures, i. e. arithmetic, rhetoric, geometry, astronomy, &c., we have no statement as to the fees to be demanded, but in all subjects during the same term no one could require assistance; we may reasonably estimate the expenses therefore of the student for lectures at about two shillings the term, taking one year with another, and supposing lectures in the last-named subjects to be charged for at the same price as those in natural fees to bedels, philosophy. There remain several other items to be reckoned; the payment of the bedels, for whom the University was careful to provide (p. 256), and the payment of the servants of the halls: the amount due to these was regulated by the expenses of the scholar and servants in Halls. himself; each had to pay two servants, a superior and an inferior (a curious instance, again, of the vitality of insignificant customs and names, which exist while the greater yield place to new; for one can hardly resist the inference that this is the origin of the upper and under scout, to be found, it is believed, in almost every college at the present day), to whom the scholar of the poorest degree had to pay, every term, threepence and one penny respectively (p. 469): the passage referred to is very interesting, showing as it does the various rates of living usually found at the period. Of the other remaining expenses incident to the student's life at Oxford, the amount absolutely necessary to be expended cannot be determined; these are the usual festivities at responsions, determination, and inception which have been already treated of: as to the first, however, we find that the questionist was limited to the expenditure of sixteen pence (p. 684); as to the other two occasions we may safely conclude that they were usually far more expensive, and the more so because there was no possible limit to the giving of suits of robes or clothes which was customary on these occasions, especially at inception. In the case of the poorer students, of course these expenses must have been to a very great extent avoided, and yet they could not have been so altogether, so that no doubt then, as now, it was not the necessary expenses of the academical course which would burden the scholar, but the far heavier and more vexatious exactions of the custom of the place, and the conventional rules of the society in which he lived, which could not be altogether disregarded without such a loss of caste as would amount in fact to absolute exclusion from all social advantages. It may be assumed that the expenses attending determination and inception in an ordinary case could not have amounted to less than ten marks, for we find (p. 353) that every mendicant friar at inception was either to feast the Regent Masters or forfeit ten marks. We have reason to know that the payments demanded from religious generally by the University were rather in excess of those required of seculars, and rightly so, for they were certainly, as a rule, more able to bear

Expenses of festivals after examinations.

them: thus the allowance for the monks of Durham College (founded 1380) was much more liberal than that made by any of the founders of colleges before that time. Supposing, then, that we take ten marks, the equivalent for a feast to the Masters by a regular graduate, on inception, to be equal to the expenditure of an ordinary secular both at determination and at inception, we shall probably not have made an unfair estimate. There remain to be accounted for the necessary clothes and journeys: as to the former some account of the various prices paid at Oxford for academical dresses will be found in the following pages (pp. 382, 519); and of journeys and the attendant expenses enough has already been said. As to books, it is really impossible to make any guess even at the probable expense. We have stated that probably the junior students possessed seldom any books, or but very few; and as to the books used by the more advanced students, or clerks, it will be seen on referring to lists of scholars' goods on reference to the index (under inventory, wills, &c.), that these varied so very much in value, from two or three pence to as many marks or even pounds, that probably in no part of his life did one clerk differ so much from another as in the value of the books he possessed. Our estimate then, if it be fairly formed, will give the following results, as the statement of a scholar's expenditure at the University for one year:—

But, supposing, a boy to go to Oxford at the age of eleven years, we have to reckon, say, two years of schooling, as to the expenses of which we have no definite data, but it cannot be put at a less sum than the above for each year; we have therefore two years at the school, and four years before the Bachelor's degree, and three before the Master's degree; this will bring our scholar to the age of twenty years at his Master of Arts degree, and his expenses during that time will have amounted to 22*l.* 19*s.* To this must be added, as we have seen, certainly as much as seven pounds for various necessary, or practically necessary, payments for feasts, perquisites of bedels, and fees on graduation and the like; for books and clothes we may allow him ten shillings a year more. This will bring his whole expenses from the age of eleven to twenty years to the sum of 34*l.* 9*s.* It will be seen that no reckoning has been made for journeys, nor for expenses during vacation, for reasons to be given presently; we will meanwhile pause to observe that in comparing the above expenses with those of more modern times, we are met by the serious question of the relative value of money at different periods in our history: there is no space here for a disquisition on this subject, but one or two observations may assist us in our comparison. The allowances for the scholars, or fellows, of University and Merton Halls was about fifty shillings a year, besides an addition for rooms and servants of about half as much more every year. From a comparison of the value of corn at that time with the average of the present day we may estimate that money then was certainly worth nearly fifteen times as much as it is now; and in the fifteenth century, at which our reckoning is supposed to be made, money is known to have been much more valuable than in the thirteenth: it is probable, therefore, that we may consider that it was twenty times as valuable in the fifteenth century as it is now and this calculation seems to be borne out by the prices of various articles mentioned in the documents here printed which will occur to the reader. Thus we should find that, in money of the present day, a youth's whole education could be paid for from the age of eleven to twenty years,—after which time, having incepted, it is to be presumed he could support himself either by lectures at Oxford or otherwise elsewhere in life,—for the sum of 639*l.*

Vacation expenses.

As to journeys and vacation expenses, the two being closely connected, we should observe that no scholars left Oxford at all, or in rare cases, between October 9th and July 7th at the least; a very large number did not leave the University at all even during the long vacation, as is evident from several allusions in this volume, and especially from one case, already cited, that, namely, of the schoolmaster John Martyn and his scholars (p. 601). Those who did leave probably often walked home, and even begged their way about the country, being, as we find from other sources, quite a nuisance sometimes to the farmers and others at whose doors they sought alms. As would be expected, however, there are scarcely any hints even as to the manner in which the vacations were spent away from Oxford in these documents. Now and then we find studies during the vacation recognized, but these apparently were pursued at Oxford (p. 88): once indeed we find (p. 684) two poor scholars receive authority from the University to beg alms; but beyond what has already been mentioned little else will be found to account for the occupation of scholars during the vacation. In all probability, however, those who left the University during that time certainly did not increase their expenses, and many would add to their resources: there are, however, other works in which more will be found than can be given here on this subject. Before dismissing this subject it should be stated that the foregoing calculation of a scholar's expenses is supposed to represent the outlay of one in fairly comfortable circumstances at the period we speak of:

Studies in vacations.

Means of subsistence for poor scholars.

there would be a very large number, probably the majority, not nearly so well provided for, eking out their precarious allowances by begging, by working as servants, by learning handicrafts, &c., and many supported by bequests and exhibitions (pp. 516, 656, 661, 700, 707), and picking up the various doles at funerals and commemoration masses, where such needy miserables were always to be found (pp. 558, 593, 648).

Legal machinery of the University.

One very important feature in Oxford life at this period has been only cursorily mentioned hitherto, the legal machinery of the University, and to it we must now give a few minutes' attention. It has been observed above that the frequency of litigation, and the very large provision for its conduct, is one of the most surprising parts of the working of the University; and indeed one can hardly imagine how employment could have been found for so large a staff of officials. It is well known, and therefore hardly needs remark, that no member of the privilege could be sued in the first instance in any other than an University court (pp. 303, 510, 719), and scholars might not even enter a lay court (p. 17). It only remains then that we ascertain as far as possible what was the constitution of the Chancellor's court. To enumerate, or even give references to, the various powers of the Chancellor, would merely be to repeat here a portion of the index and table of contents; it may suffice to observe that he was ex officio a justice of the peace (p. 535), that he had almost supreme power (except of course of life and death) over all members of the privilege, that this power consisted of imprisonment, banishment, fines (p. 305), and excommunication, all of which are of continual occurrence; over the townsmen he only exercised a joint jurisdiction with the mayor and civic authorities (p. 164), between whom and the Chancellor there existed a sort of right of extradition. The Chancellor's court was held, it appears, either at his own lodgings, which was the more usual practice, or, occasionally, at St. Mary's church; the Proctors were assessors, and the three seem to have constituted the court. When a culprit was brought before them it was usual for him to have an advocate, but who these advocates were, or how qualified, we are not told; that they were very numerous (p. 77), and contrived for their own ends to protract causes indefinitely, to the great injury of the University, there are constant complaints (p. 260). So far then the officers of the court and its practice may be easily understood, and there would be nothing surprising if occupation were continually found for such a court; but we read of deputy judges being appointed to sit in various parts of the town, having, it is presumed, a subordinate and delegated authority (pp. 69, 70, et sqq.); it is provided that they must be bachelors of civil law at least, chosen every term by the professors (i.e. Doctors or Masters) of canon and civil law, and were called "Hebdomadarii." The editor would take this opportunity of correcting an error of no slight importance made by him in reference to this subject; it will be found that (on the margin of pp. 70, 72) the word "judices" has been wrongly interpreted "jury;" the reason of which is simply that this portion of the work was prepared at a time when his knowledge of the subject was not sufficiently matured; after observation showed him, what at first seemed difficult to understand, that there was a large number of judges holding courts at once in Oxford. In more than one instance the names of these deputy judges for the several parishes are preserved to us (pp. 189, 749). The mode of conducting causes before them does not appear to have differed from the process in the Chancellor's court; in both cases the scholar appeared with his advocate, if he required one, and his own master (p. 72), but in the case of the deputy judges the accused had the right of objecting to his judge (p. 72), and no assessors are mentioned in these inferior courts. The consequence of this multiplication of courts was incessant appeals to higher tribunals, which became so serious a hindrance to the business of the University that statutes are constantly occurring framed for the purpose of regulating or preventing this practice (pp. 74, 230, 260). Of the order of these appeals it was ordered that no spiritual cause terminable within the University could be carried out of it; in the first instance an appeal lay from the Chancellor to congregation of regents, and from them to congregation of regents and non-regents, and from them at once to the pope (p. 461), and not to any other authority within the realm: where cases of appeal to the archbishop of Canterbury or other bishops occur, it seems to have been done by a special agreement to decide by their arbitration (p. 145). There is no mention of the exercise of any jurisdiction in spiritual causes exercised by the above-mentioned deputy judges, but in temporal causes an appeal lay from them first to the Chancellor, and then, as above stated, to the superior courts (p. 232); and in all temporal causes the ultimate appeal was to the king (ibid.). To him also was addressed the letter of the Chancellor called "significavit" (pp. 225, 795), which was an appeal from the Chancellor to the king requesting him to try the efficacy of the secular arm in cases where the authority of the church, as represented at Oxford, had failed in the case of some refractory delinquent. In addition to these provisions for legal processes, there will be found to have existed a recognized system of settling some causes without recourse to regular courts of law. First, compurgation. This process, sufficiently well known to require no detailed account here, consisted in appearance of the accused, sometimes with more, sometimes with fewer, always with some friends, before the Chancellor, and making of oath before him by all of them conjointly that the charge was unfounded; of this numerous instances will be found, some of them very curious, particularly as to defamation of character (pp.

Compurgation.

Evils of the process.

509, 626, 750). The evil results of this practice are largely insisted on by Dr. Gascoigne, who enters his protest in the Chancellor's court book (p. 536) against the indiscriminate admission of accused parties to this method of clearing themselves. He complains that he has known of cases where parties have not only perjured themselves, but not hesitated also to admit privately that they had done so; and farther that no good end can be answered by it, for no one dare object to another being admitted to compurgation, knowing that such an objection would render him liable to violence and maiming at the least, if not murder: and he follows up his remarks by advice to succeeding Chancellors to be cautious how they admit accused persons to this privilege, and not to divulge the name of the accuser to the person accused (p. 537).

Arbitration,

The other is arbitration; of this we shall find several instances, interesting in many ways, and especially as giving on several occasions a very near view of the details of life of the period (pp. 550, 552, 720, &c.; see Arbitration).

manner of, and details relating to.

The plan was for the parties to agree in nominating some one or sometimes two arbitrators, and bind themselves under a heavy penalty to abide by their decision, and if they could come to no decision within a certain time, then by the decision of some other specified arbitrator. The awards in these cases are sometimes exceedingly curious; for instance, the parties are required to shake hands, to go on their knees to each other, to give each other "the "kiss of peace," and generally to make up the whole quarrel by a feast, the dishes at which are sometimes also judicially determined (ibid.).

To the foregoing notices the editor had intended to add others; and, especially, of the officers of the University, but the space allotted to this introduction is already well nigh filled, and he must now conclude this too brief and imperfect sketch, of which he can only say that it pretends to be no more than a sketch, and may at least, he would venture to hope, be sufficient to induce the reader to search in the documents themselves for further information. There will be found, scattered here and there throughout the work, many interesting facts relating rather to mediæval life generally than to Oxford in particular; these, however, have not been noticed in this introduction, both because it has been the editor's aim strictly to confine himself to the subject undertaken, viz., Academical life and studies at Oxford, and also because most if not all of them have been already touched very ably in a previous work in this series (Liber Albus, &c.). There are also very many things which are naturally a part of his subject which the editor has not been able to find space for in the introduction; on looking over what he has written, he is however rather inclined to regret that he has attempted so many things, than that he has omitted some; the number of subjects claiming attention is so great, and the space of time covered by the work so very large, and that of necessity, that it has been no easy task both to select what should be mentioned and to handle them when selected.

Nor can the editor allow the work to be launched without a word of apology for the long delay that has occurred in its production. The simple truth is that it was first designed and begun at a season of comparative leisure some years ago, and, in the ordinary course, would have found its completion in a year or two; but residence at Oxford brought with it a very laborious life, and the necessary work of the place forced literary pursuits aside; so that not only was the time which could be given to the work small, but, what was a far more serious hindrance, it had to be always put aside at the commencement of every term, and was soon well nigh forgotten; to resume a work, so different from the routine of life at Oxford, as soon as each vacation commenced, required of itself no little effort, and to take up the thread afresh, and re-adapt himself to the fresh subject required even more. To these difficulties must be added the loss of the whole leisure of one year (or nearly) from severe illness, and lastly the removal to the charge of an onerous and laborious parish at a distance from all books of reference during the past year; which last circumstance will, it is hoped, be accepted as an excuse for some slight errors which may appear to the reader. In two particulars the stereotyped custom will be found to have not been followed; first as to "errata" or "corrigenda." One of these has already been apologized for, and there are two others which the editor would correct here; one is that, by inadvertence, Thursday is put instead of Friday, on margin of p. 86; the other is that "hats," on the margin of p. 3, should be "caps." In the second place no vocabulary has been given; and for this reason: whatever words occur in this work which the editor did not himself understand while preparing the work, he was able to find either by having recourse to Du Cange or to other well known glossaries, and very often those of Liber Albus, Custumarum, &c.; and those sources of knowledge are, it is presumed, equally accessible to others; some few words, however, he regrets to say, are to be found in this volume which he could not find anywhere, nor meet with any explanation of them; it seemed not very useful therefore to arrange them, to the amount of half-a-dozen, on a sheet by themselves.

Lastly, there remain the "gratiarum actiones." First, the acknowledgments of the editor are due, where they cannot be received. If the present work supplies any gap, the idea of first undertaking it was suggested by the late Canon Shirley, and so far the credit is due to him; at least he first suggested to the editor the idea that there were documents worth publishing in the Archives at Oxford; whether he was right or no the reader must form his own opinion: for the work itself the editor is alone responsible; but he cannot but acknowledge with affectionate remembrance the assistance so often rendered by Dr. Shirley during the course of a friendship of many years ; to him it is certainly due that there are not many more blunders in this work than there are. In the next place, valuable help was at one time afforded, in procuring permission to inspect and transcribe the records of the University, by the present Bishop of Peterborough and the Dean of Westminster, to both of whom the editor desires here to render his acknowledgment; and also not less perhaps, though for a wholly different sort of aid, he would here tender his thanks to all the librarians of the Bodleian library, and to the authorities of more than one college, and especially to the master of University College, to whose courtesy and liberality he has been indebted for more than one document, for their uniform kindness and attention ; and lastly to numerous other friends, who from time to time have offered a suggestion, and whose assistance is not forgotten by the editor, though their names are not written here.

LIBRI CANCELLARII ET PROCURATORUM.

LITTERA N.[1] LEGATI DE PŒNA BURGENSIUM PROPTER SUSPENDIUM CLERICORUM AB EIS COMMISSUM. A. 46. B. 4.

N., Dei gratia Tusculanus Episcopus Apostolicæ sedis legatus, dilectis in Christo filiis Burgensibus Oxoniæ salutem in Domino. A.D. 1214.

The Townsmen are to excuse the Scholars one half of the rent of all Halls let to them in the town for a period of ten years, in compensation for having hung certain clerks.

Cum propter suspendium clericorum a vobis commissum mandatis Ecclesiæ per omnia stare jurassetis, Nos, volentes agere misericorditer vobiscum, statuimus quod a festo S. Michaelis, anno ab incarnatione Domini millesimo ducentesimo decimo quarto usque in decem annos sequentes, Scholaribus Oxoniæ studentibus condonetur medietas mercedis Hospitiorum omnium locandorum clericis in eadem villa, mercedis inquam taxatæ communi consilio clericorum et nostro ante recessum Scholarium propter suspendium prædictum clericorum: Finitis vero prædictis decem annis, aliis decem annis proximo sequentibus locabuntur Hospitia sub mercede cleri, ut prædictum est, taxata.

Hæc de Hospitiis constructis et taxatis ante præfatum clericorum recessum:[1] constructa vero postmodum vel construenda aliaque prius constructa sed non taxata arbitratu quatuor Magistrorum et quatuor Burgensium taxabuntur, et prædicto modo per utrumque decennium locabuntur. Communia quoque ejusdem villæ annuatim dabit quinquaginta duos solidos dispensandos in usus pauperum Scholarium per manus Abbatis de Osneya et Prioris ecclesiæ S. Frideswydæ de consilio venerabilis fratris Hugonis, tunc Episcopi Lincolniensis et successorum suorum vel Archidiaconi loci sive ejus officialis aut Cancellarii, quem Episcopus Lincolniensis Scholaribus ibidem præficict, ita scilicet quod viginti sex solidi solventur annuatim in festo Omnium Sanctorum et viginti sex solidi in Capite Jejunii. Præter hoc etiam eadem Communia pascet centum pauperes Scholares in pane, cerevisia, potagio, et uno ferculo piscium vel carnium singulis annis in perpetuum die S. Nicholai quos Episcopus Lincolniæ vel Archidiaconus loci seu ejus officialis aut ipse Cancellarius vel alius ab hoc Episcopo Lincolniæ deputatus providerit. Jurabitis etiam quod victualia et alia [Scholaribus][2] necessaria justo et rationabili pretio vendetis, et ab aliis vendi fideliter procurabitis, et quod in fraudem hujus provisionis graves non facietis constitutiones vel onerosas, per quas conditio clericorum deterioretur. Si vero contingat amodo clericum capi a vobis, statim, cum fueritis super eo requisiti ab Episcopo Lincolniæ seu Archidiacono loci vel ejus officiali vel a Cancellario seu ab eo quem Episcopus Lincolniæ huic officio deputaverit, captum ei reddetis, nec aliquo modo machinabimini in his vel in aliis quod[3] præfati Lincolniæ Episcopi jurisdictio elidatur, vel jus suum vel ecclesiæ suæ in aliquo minuatur.

Also, they are to pay yearly fifty-two shillings for the use of poor Scholars at Oxford, and to feast one hundred of the poor Scholars every year on S. Nicholas' day.

Also, they shall swear that they will sell to the said Scholars all provisions, &c., at a just and reasonable rate.

And, if they arrest a clerk, they shall, on being required, deliver him up to the Bishop of Lincoln or other proper authority.

[1] Clericorum repeated after recessum in A.

[2] Written in the margin.

[3] quod] Probably a clerical error for quo.

Jurabunt etiam quinquaginta de majoribus ex vobis pro se et Communia et hæredibus suis, quod hæc omnia supradicta fideliter observabunt, et hoc juramentum quolibet anno renovabitis ad mandatum Episcopi Lincolniæ per quot idem Episcopus voluerit citra numerum prætaxatum. Cartam quoque sigillo communi signatam sub prædictis articulis facietis ascribi, et venerabili fratri Hugoni nunc Episcopo Lincolniæ liberabitis, cui voluerit in custodiam committendam ; hoc autem vos et hæredes vestri facietis, ut honor et reverentia clericis eo exhibeatur abundantius quo magis per vos fuerant dehonestati. Magistri vero, qui post Scholarium [recessum][1] irreverenter legerunt Oxoniæ, suspendentur per triennium ab officio legendi ibidem. Omnes autem, qui de suspendio clericorum fuissetis confessi vel convicti, venietis, ad mandatum venerabilis fratris Hugonis nunc Episcopi Lincolniæ, cum interdictum fuerit laxatum, ad sepulcra clericorum discalceati et discincti, sine capis et palliis, sequente vos Communia, et ipsorum corpora differetis in cœmeterio sepelienda ubi clerus providerit, præstito sibi, ut prædictum est, a vobis juramento ; et, carta[2] communi confecta et venerabili fratri Hugoni nunc Episcopo Lincolniæ liberata, licentiam habeant Scholares et Magistri Oxoniam redeundi et ibidem legendi, exceptis his qui per triennium sunt suspensi, de quibus est præmissum.

They are to renew this oath every year.

The Masters who continued reading at Oxford after the flight of Scholars from the University are to be suspended from lecturing for three years.

All townsmen convicted of the above offence are to come without shoes, or hats, or cloaks, to the graves of the clerks who had been hung, and followed by the other townsmen, to give them proper burial in a place to be chosen.

Si vero contra statuta nostra et proprium veneritis juramentum, ex ipso facto sciatis vos excommunicationis vinculo innodatos, et venerabilis frater Hugo nunc Episcopus Lincolniæ et successores sui vos et villam vestram reducant in pristinam suspensionis sententiam. Vobis igitur auctoritate legationis qua fungimur mandamus in remissionem peccatorum, firmiter injungentes

A. 11. PRO ANNUITATE SOLVENDA PER EYNSHAM.

[A.D.1350.] The Subdean and Chapter of Lincoln have found in their archives a deed of the Abbot and convent of Eynsham.

Noverint universi quod nos, Subdecanus et Capitulum ecclesiæ Beatæ Mariæ Lincolniensis, Decano ejusdem absente, rimato registro in archivis ecclesiæ Lincolniensis residente ac carum literis et munimentis in iisdem archivis, inter cætera quoddam scriptum sive cartam, consignatam sigillis religiosorum virorum Abbatis et conventus de Eynsham sub cera viridi, eo qui sequitur tenore, reperimus, Deed of the Abbot and Convent of Eynsham.

A.D. 1219. The Abbot and convent of Eynsham undertake to pay, in behalf of the burgesses of Oxford, the yearly pension to the University for the maintenance of certain poor Scholars there, and also to feed once a year a hundred poor Scholars, to each of whom they give twopence, to be paid annually on the same day.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, A.,[2] Dei gratia Abbas de Eynsham et ejusdem loci Conventus, salutem in Domino.

Noverit Universitas vestra quod, cum Burgenses Oxoniæ pro suspendio clericorum mandatis Ecclesiæ per omnia stare jurassent, secundum statutum venerabilis patris domini Nicholai Tusculani Episcopi Apostolicæ sedis legati, et eis ab eodem inter cætera fuisset injunctum, quod quinquaginta et duos solidos annuatim in perpetuum in usus pauperum Scholarium dispensandos de consilio venerabilis patris Hugonis tunc Episcopi

[1] A later hand adds a note here as follows: — "Mem. quod hæc "carta sigillata est in Thesaurario "Lincolniæ."

[2] Adam. The original instrument is in the possession of the University, and has been collated with this transcript: the date cannot be exactly determined, but the name Adam occurs as Abbot of Eynsham in the 3rd and 9th years of Henry III., and the writing of the MS. agrees with this date.

Lincolniæ et successorum suorum, vel Archidiaconi loci, seu ejus officialis aut Cancellarii, quem Episcopus Lincolniæ Scholaribus ibidem præficiet, ita scilicet quod viginti sex solidi solventur annuatim in festo Omnium Sanctorum, et viginti sex solidi in Capite jejunii; præter hoc etiam quod centum pauperes scholares die S. Nicholai singulis annis pascent in perpetuum, quo Episcopus Lincolniensis vel Archidiaconus loci, seu ejus officialis aut ipse Cancellarius, vel alius ad hoc ab Episcopo Lincolniensi deputatus providerit, istud onus in nos integro suscepimus singulis annis perpetuo faciendum secundum formam præmissam, ita tamen quod ad centum pauperes clericos die S. Nicholai pascendos eodem die sexdecim solidos et octo denarios dabimus, annuatim inter ipsos, qui inde pascendi fuerint, distribuendos, ut singuli singulos duos denarios accipiant per manus eorum quos Episcopus Lincolniensis ad hoc assignaverit. Ad hoc autem nos Episcopo et ecclesiæ Lincolniensi per cartam nostram presentem obligamus in perpetuum, et præsenti scripto sigilla nostra apposuimus, teste capitulo.

Quod[1] quidem testimonium veritate signavimus universis per præsentes sigillo nostro consignatas. Datum in capitulo nostro Lincolniæ ultimo die mensis Augusti anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo quinquagesimo.

universis Christi fidelibus præsentes literas inspecturis salutem in Domino.

Cardinal Otto will deal mercifully with the University; therefore he removes the sentence of excommunication which he had pronounced in consequence of an attack made upon him while at Oseney;

Humani[1] generis conditor Deus omnipotens et redemptor eo benignitatis gubernaculo utitur ad regendam Universitatem ipsius, licet positam in maligno, quod etiam si delinquentur ex ea feriat quosdam castigando ad tempus, quosdam etiam effectualiter conciando[2] prout merita exigunt singulorum, ab ipsius tamen Universitatis custodia de mane usque ad vesperam nec protectionis dextram nec oculum piæ provisionis[3] avertit, nec bonorum obliviscitur propter malos, sed malorum potius[4] propter bonorum interdum patrocinia miseretur. Denique Nos, Ipsius mansuetudini et justitiæ coaptare pro nostræ fragilitatis modulo cupientes, ut, sicut rationi[5] suæ nos fecit benigna dignatione conformes, sic actionum suarum, quatenus potest nostra infirmitas prævalere, inveniat etiam sectatores circa Universitatem Magistrorum et Scholarium Oxoniæ commorantium. Hujus magisterii forma prout possumus usi sumus, dum, præter illos nequitiæ filios, qui ausu nefario in nos et nostros insultum facere præsumpserunt aut præstiterunt facientibus auxilium, consilium, vel favorem, quos excommunicationis (suspensionis)[6] perpetuæ ab officio et beneficio privationis et aliis infamiam et irregularitatem inferentibus sententiis, ut in confectis ex inde literis plenius continetur,[7] duximus innodandos et relinquimus innodatos, aliam Universitatem totam in sinum amoris nostri pleno affectu recolligimus et nostræ benevolentiæ restituimus et favori, et qualibet commotionis nebula de corde nostro

Acta anno Domini millesimo ducentesimo quinquagesimo secundo.

A great disturbance having taken place between the Northern and Irish Scholars, it is resolved that twelve persons shall be chosen from each party to draw up conditions of peace.

In ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ in plena Congregatione, cum esset magna dissensio et discordia inter BorealES et Hibernienses mota, provisum est[2] quod ad pacis ordinationem inter partes eligerentur duodecim de utraque parte, qui formam pacis ordinarent inter partes, et in posterum formam pacis conservandæ providerent,[3] qui electi formam constituerunt subscriptam.

To preserve peace in future, thirty or forty from either side shall be bound not to disturb the peace of the University themselves, not to comfort others in doing so, and to give secret information to the Chancellor if they shall hear of any other person thus transgressing.

Ad pacis observationem in futurum, sublata causa fomenti discordiæ, primo eligantur ex utraque parte, ex una triginta vel quadraginta et totidem ex altera, qui promittant proprium factum; in qua promissione tres articulos promittant pro se, quod non turbabunt Universitatem,[4] quod non fovebunt malefactores de partibus suis vel alienis, si quos sciverint in secreto intimabunt Cancellario.

[2] The date of this and the following bulls is uncertain; the bull may be of Innocent III., in which case the date will be A.D. 1210. If we assign it to Innocent IV., it must have been just at the expiration of his reign; and that this is the true date may be safely assumed, for in the Bullarium no bulls are to be found issued by Innocent III. from Anagnia in the same year and month with these; and, which is perhaps more conclusive, we find the usual expression "non obstante," by which Innocent IV. is so well known.

[5] This title in A. is as placed in the text; in B. it stands before "Memorandum quod," &c. &c.; in A. the word is apparently not "regentium," but "regratorum," the contraction being "reg̃.," but in B. and C. the word "regentium" is at full length, and in the other places in A., where, in this article, the words either "regens" or "regentis" or "regentium" occur, the contraction used is not that which might stand for "regratorum," but for "regens," or some inflexion of it. Anthony Wood, however, gives his opinion in favour of "regratorum." I have not felt justified in inserting "regratorum" into the text, when there is so great a preponderance in favour of "regentium" in the MSS. The matter is not wholly without interest, because upon the word to be adopted here depends the question apparently of the origin of the "Masters of the streets," or police of the University.

Reformatio pacis inter Universitatem et Burgenses.

Several points of dispute having arisen between the University and the town, both parties appeared, by their deputies, before the King and Parliament, and settled their differences as follows:

Cum inter Cancellarium et Scholares Universitatis Oxoniæ ex una parte, et Majorem et Burgenses ejusdem villæ ex altera, diversæ contentiones et exactiones, super quibusdam gravaminibus et contumeliis hinc inde illatis, motæ fuissent, tandem coram ipso Domino Rege et ejus consilio, ad Parliamentum post Pascha anno[1] regni, videlicet regni Regis Edwardi filii Regis Henrici, octodecimo, in præsentia Cancellarii et quorundam Magistrorum prædictæ Universitatis plenariam potestatem habentium, et etiam Majoris et Burgensium prædictæ villæ mutuo consentientium, contentiones et contumeliæ quæcumque hinc inde illatæ usque festum S. Johannis ante Portam Latinam, concedente et consentiente ipso Domino Rege, in hunc modum conquieverunt:

All claims of either party against the other up to the date of the appeal are to be cancelled.

Videlicet, quod omnes exactiones et demandæ, quas prædicti Cancellarius et Scholares habuerunt vel habere poterunt versus prædictos Majorem et Burgenses, et etiam idem Major et Burgenses habuerunt vel habere poterunt versus prædictos Cancellarium et Scholares, quoquomodo[2] quacunque occasione quarumcunque transgressionum, usque in diem prædictum hinc inde factarum[3] quiete et integre remittantur, irritentur, et adnullentur; scilicet quod Domino Regi et ejus consilio visum est, quod per compositionem seu concordiam prædictam nulla persona singularis[4] ab actione personali occasione transgressionum sibi personaliter illatarum[5] possit vel debeat excludi; concessum est et provisum bona fide hinc inde quod nec prædictus Cancellarius but they shall be given to the Hospital of S. John aforesaid.

Ad hoc etiam quod prædicti Major et Burgenses queruntur quod, cum per cartam Domini Regis non conceduntur aliquæ libertates aliis in prædicta villa quam Scholaribus Universitatis prædictæ villæ, et quod illi Scholares sint exempti a Communitate prædicta ad respondendum coram eis, vel simul cum ipsis, de aliquibus rebus ipsum Dominum Regem vel Communitatem prædictam tangentibus, prædicti Cancellarius et Scholares per Procuratores suos alios sibi appropriant, et qui non sunt Scholares, ut Scissores, Barbitonsores, Scriptores,[2] Pergamenarios, et hujusmodi qui non sunt de jurisdictione sua, et qui habent in eadem villa uxores, familiam, et mercandisas suas, et hoc ad grave damnum Domini Regis et firmariorum suorum.

(6.) The Chancellor and Scholars extend the privilege of the University unduly, to Tailors, Barbers, Writers, Parchment-makers, &c., and their families.

Qui gaudent privilegio Universitatis Oxoniæ.[3]

Ad quod per prædictum Cancellarium et Magistros et etiam per prædictos Majorem et Burgenses unanimiter est concordatum, quod de cætero nullus gaudeat Libertatibus seu privilegiis Universitatis prædictæ, nisi clerici et eorum familiæ,[4] et servientes, Pergamenarii, Luminatores, Scriptores, Barbitonsores, et alii homines de officio qui sunt de robis ipsorum clericorum, et, si de mercandisis aliquibus se intromittant, sint talliabiles simul cum Burgensibus.

(7.) Henceforth only Clerks and their families, the Bedels, Parchment-makers, Illuminators, Writers, Barbers, and others who are occupied about the clothes of the clerks, &c., are to be held as included in the privilege of the University.

Ad hoc etiam quod prædicti Major et Burgenses queruntur quod, ubi ipsi solebant tenementa sua in prædicta villa tradere et dimittere ad firmam pro voluntate sua ad sustentationem suam et puerorum suorum, prædicti Cancellarius et Scholares non permittunt eos tenementa sua ad breviorem terminum tradere quam ad terminum decem annorum, ad grave damnum Communitati prædictæ.

(7.) The Chancellor and Scholars will not allow the Townsmen to let their houses [for Scholars] for a less term than ten years.

De domibus admittendis[1] ad firmam.

Ad quod Dominus Rex vult et præcipit quod Burgenses prædicti non impediantur per prædictos Cancellarium et Scholares et Procuratores suos, quin tenementa sua dare [et][2] vendere possint [vel][2] ad firmam tradere, prout sibi viderint expedire, ita tamen quod fraus, collusio, seu conventio[3] non fiat per quod clerici dehospitantur vel eorum hospitia fiant cariora; et etiam quod clerici hospitia sua prius[4] locata non dimittant contra consuetudinem usitatam.

Henceforth no such limitation shall be imposed.

Ad hoc etiam quod prædicti Major et Burgenses queruntur quod, cum quilibet liber homo rationabilem[5] debet habere summonitionem,[6] prædictus Cancellarius ad horam primæ eos summoneri[6] facit quod sint coram eo ad horam tertiam, et, si non venerint, facit eos excommunicari et puniri pro voluntate sua.

A.D. 1304.

Statutum est per Regentes et Non-regentes quod circa electionem Procuratorum Universitatis Oxoniæ hoc de cætero firmiter observetur, ut nullus Procurator, qui proximo ante ipsam electionem officio Procuratorum cedit, seu ipsum officium quovis alio modo dimittit, habeat in ipsa electione vocem passivam; videlicet quod non sit unus de primis duobus nominandis ad eligendum sex electores, nec unus ex illis sex, nec tertius nec septimus ad concordandum prædictos duos vel sex, si eos contigerit discordare; per hoc tamen non intendit Universitas aliquem excludere, quin in simili electione eligi poterit in Procuratorem, si aliunde ad hoc idoneus et utilis reputetur. Editum erat istud statutum cito post Pascha anno Domino millesimo trecentesimo quarto.

An outgoing Proctor may not be one of the board for the nomination of the electors of the new Proctor, nor may he be one of the electors, but he may be re-elected Proctor.

Quia frequenter, altero Procuratorum, et forte minus juste aliquoties, contradicente, congregationibus artistarum præviis ad congregationem Regentium et Non-regentium apud S. Ordinatio Domini Johannis de Pontysera[1] quondam Wyntoniensis Episcopi de cista.

A.D. 1306.

The executors of John Pontysera, Bishop of Winchester, have given to the University the sum of two hundred marks for the use of the Masters and Scholars, on the following conditions:—

Aspecturis et audituris præsentes literas Christi fidelibus universis, Walterus Cancellarius cœtusque Magistrorum Universitatis Oxoniæ unaninis salutem in omnium Salvatore.[2]

Cum inter cætera pietatis opera Scholarium indigentiis subvenire pium existat, qui, ut in agro Domini scientiæ margaritam acquirant, laboribus, discriminibus et ærumnis variis se exponunt, hac igitur consideratione executores bonæ memoriæ domini Johannis de Pontisara quondam Wyntoniensis Episcopi benevolentiam et specialem affectionem ad Magistros et Scholares Universitatis antedictæ concipientes, nobis ducentas marcas sterlingorum liberaliter donarunt et tradiderunt, quas ab eisdem executoribus recognoscimus recepisse et habuisse, convertendas[3] in usum et utilitatem Magistrorum et Scholarium Universitatis prædictæ, sub forma articulorum inferius annotatorum, videlicet, quod singulis annis in vigilia Beati Nicholai in hieme, fiat a nobis anniversarium dicti Episcopi solemne, cum plenario officio mortuorum, et speciali memoria pro animabus domini Johannis Maunsel et Johannis dicti domini Johannis nepotis defunctorum, et quod sacerdos circuiens scholas singulas cum serviente publico, ut fieri solet annuatim, nomina præfatorum defunctorum recitet inter alios benefactores Universitatis.

that on S. Nicholas' eve annually the said Bishop shall be commemorated in a mass for the dead, with special remembrances made of John Maunsel, and John nephew of the Bishop, and that every year the priest, making circuit of the schools with the bedel, shall recite the names of the aforesaid persons among the benefactors of the University;

Item, quod in missis pro benefactoribus in principio resumptionis Magistrorum, et instante cessatione eorumdem, ac processionibus faciendis in omnibus aliis missis communibus Universitatis, fiat memoria specialis de dicto Episcopo cum hac oratione: "Deus, qui inter

profectum ejusdem in Universitate Oxoniæ studentium, per dominum Cancellarium Oxoniæ venerabilesque doctores, in sacra pagina tunc regentes, una cum Procuratoribus ac per quosdam Doctores et alios Magistros, de singulis facultatibus ab Universitate deputatos ad hoc specialiter, vice et auctoritate dictæ Universitatis, unanimiter ab eisdem extitit, modo quo sequitur, ordinatum.

In the election of a fellow, morals, learning, and poverty shall be the qualifications of the successful candidate,

In primis ordinatum est quod in electione cujuscumque socii, ad eleemosynam per antedictum Magistrum Willelmum assignatam Scholaribus, de cætero facienda, omnes et singuli socii, quibus ex eleemosyna ministratur ejusdem, et qui pro tempore electionis præsentes fuerint, eligent sine acceptione patriæ vel personarum talem, quem credunt ornatum moribus, in facultatibus pauperem et ad proficiendum in facultate theologica magis aptum, cæteris vero paribus, ordinarunt quod ille præferatur cæteris, qui de partibus Donelmi proximo oriundus extitit.

cæteris paribus a native of the neighbourhood of Durham is to be preferred.

The fellow elected shall be presented to the Chancellor, Doctors of Divinity and Proctors, who shall admit or reject him within two or three days.

Electores vero electum suum, quam citius poterunt, dictis domino Cancellario et Doctoribus sacræ theologiæ una cum Procuratoribus præsentent, qui ad deliberandum de electo et ejus conditionibus biduum habeant aut triduum, et extunc, juxta conscientias eorum, ipsum reprobent vel admittant; quod si contingat ipsum ex causa legitima reprobari, absque omni strepitu judiciali prædicti socii, juxta formam qua prius, alium eligant sine mora.

The fellows may study theology only, except in the Long Vacation.

Ordinatum est etiam quod omnes socii de domo audiant theologiam continue, ita quod aliam facultatem audiendo non admisceant, nisi in magna vacatione, et tunc liceat eis audire decretales, si voluerint, vel decreta.

They shall live together in one house.

Ordinatum est insuper quod socii simul maneant in una domo, ita quod absens quocumque colore in villa vel extra, pro tempore absentiæ nihil percipiat, nisi fuerit absens causa recreationis, et tunc ultra mensem non percipiat, sed cum præsens fuerit pro eo liberetur consueta communa.

Item, Procurator eorum, qui et Bursarius dicitur, ultra quemcumque alium, decem solidos annuos percipiat pro labore. The bursar shall have an annual additional stipend of ten shillings.

Item, habeat quilibet socius pro pensione domus et salario famulorum et aliis necessariis, ultra communas suas, dimidium marcæ annuatim. Every fellow shall be allowed half a mark yearly on account of servants, &c.

Item, si contingat aliquem ultra plenum terminum absentare, licentia a sociis non obtenta, eligatur alius loco sui, nisi adversa valetudine vel alia legitima causa in aliis partibus ne veniat fuerit impeditus. If one be absent without lawful cause longer than one term, his fellowship shall be vacated.

Item, si aliquis fuerit promotus ad beneficium quinque marcarum, tunc non percipiat ulterius de eleemosyna prædicta, sed loco sui alius eligatur. A benefice of the value of five marks a year shall vacate a fellowship.

Item, quod quilibet socius infra septennium suæ auditionis in scholis opponat et ulterius proficiat prout decet. The fellows shall proceed to their opponency within seven years.

Item, ordinatum est quod dicti Scholares, qui pro tempore fuerint, duas missas, singulis annis in parochia ubi degunt, pro anima fundatoris faciant celebrare. They shall have mass celebrated twice a year, in the parish in which they live, for the soul of the founder.

Item, quod senior, si non est capellanus, se faciat capellanum, quam cito poterit, ordinari. The senior shall be chaplain.

Item, quod nomine vulgari, quantum in eis est, Scholares Magistri Wilhelmi de Donelmo se faciant nominari. They shall go by the name of The Scholars of William of Durham.

Item, quod procurator domorum, qui pro tempore fuerit, de omnibus receptis et expensis coram Cancellario et quibusdam aliis per ipsum vocandis, et coram comitiva singulis annis, citra resumptionem Magistorum A. 54. B. 87. C. 104. D. 75. They shall give an account to the post Pentecosten, fidelem computum reddat, prius ad hoc corporali præstito sacramento; socii etiam computi auditores ad computum fideliter examinandum, in virtute sacramenti præstiti, astringantur.

In the event of deprivation of a fellow, the Chancellor, Doctors of Divinity, and Proctors shall have cognizance of the case.

Item, ordinarunt præfati quod si aliquem a præfata domo, vel officio in illa, propter aliquod sinistrum amoveri contingat, cognoscendi de causa summarie et amovendi culpabilem dicti Cancellarius et Doctores, una cum Procuratoribus Universitatis, omnem habeant potestatem.

The fellowships shall increase in number with the increase of revenue.

Item, ordinatum est quod, ad augmentationem reddituum sufficienter pro uno socio, novus socius eligatur.

In cases of doubt on any subject, the Chancellor, &c., shall be appealed to.

Item, si in aliquo prædictorum fuerit hæsitatio seu dispensatio facienda, super omnibus talibus habeant prædicti dispensandi plenarie potestatem.

The fellows shall recite these statutes on the days of commemoration of their founder.

Item, recitent inter se has ordinationes diebus singulis quibus pro suo celebrant fundatore.

On election they shall swear to observe all these statutes.

Item, ordinatum est quod dicti Scholares singuli, et eorum successores, in primo sui ingressu sacramentum præstent corporale, quod omnes supradictos articulos inviolabiliter observabunt, nisi beneficium dispensationis fuerint adepti.

Hæc ordinarunt prædicti dominus Cancellarius et Doctores, ut præmittitur, aliis ordinationibus seu statutis quibuscumque, istis non contrariis, nihilominus in suo robore duraturis.

Certain Articles condemned at Oxford.

A.D. 1314. The Doctors of divinity at Oxford pronounce certain articles to be heretical.

Isti articuli subscripti fuerunt reprobati tanquam erronei a Magistris theologiæ Universitatis Oxoniæ, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo quarto-decimo, mense Februarii :—

(1.) Quod Deus Pater potuit produxisse creaturam ante Verbum origine, natura vel tempore.

(2.) Quod Pater potuit producere omnem creaturam sine Filio producente, de potentia absoluta etsi non de potentia ordinata.

(3.) Quod etsi Filius nullam creaturam produceret, vel produxisset, vel producere potuisset, cum Pater omnem creaturam creabilem in priori originis, Verbo non producto, produceret, Filius nihil minus esset omnipotens, quia haberet eandem vim et eandem potentiam cum Patre, sicut Spiritus Sanctus est omnipotens, quamvis non possit producere Filium sicut Pater potest, quia, non obstante, hic tamen haberet eandem vim et eandem potentiam cum Patre.

(4.) Quod si creatura produceretur ante Verbum, debet intelligi produci a prima persona in divinis, non a Patre.

(5.) Quod opera Trinitatis, respectu creaturarum, sunt indistincta[1] de facto, non tamen necessario, quia alio modo posset fieri de potentia Dei absoluta, sicut redemptio generis humani posset fieri, vel potuisset fieri, sine Christi morte et incarnatione.

(6.) Quod si Pater potest producere Verbum, quod majus est quam creatura, sine socio, eadem ratione, vel majori, Pater potest producere creaturam, quæ minor est, sine socio, id est, sine Filio producente.

[1] MS. indisticta.

(7.) Quod ex quo philosophi, qui tam clare et limpide intellexerunt, non posuerunt productionem Verbi in divinis, et tamen posuerunt cunctas res emanare ab uno supposito, quod est perfectum et sufficiens, nec viderunt in hoc formalem contradictionem ; ita et ego possem ponere, quod Deus Pater potuit producere creaturas ante Verbum, sine formali contradictione.

(8.) Quod si potuit creatura produci ante Verbum, non propter hoc sequitur formalis repugnantia terminorum, nec ex parte Patris producentis, nec ex parte creaturæ productæ.

A.D. circ. 1320. Aspecturis et audituris præsentes literas Christi fidelibus universis, Johannes Luterel, Cancellarius, cœtusque Magistrorum Universitatis Oxoniæ unanimis, salutem in omnium Salvatore.

Gilbert de Routheburv, of his charity, has bequeathed to the University the sum of two hundred and fifty marks, to establish two funds; the one, of two hundred marks, to be lent to the Masters and Scholars solely; the other, of fifty marks, also for the use of the Masters and Scholars, may on occasion be lent to the University to defray legal expenses;

Cum inter cætera pietatis opera Scholarium indigentiis subvenire primum existat, qui, ut in agro Domini scientiæ margaritam acquirant, laboribus, discriminibus et ærumnis variis se exponunt, hac igitur consideratione dominus Gilbertus de Routheburi, benevolentiam et specialem affectionem ad Magistros et Scholares Universitatis antedictæ concipiens, nobis ducentas et quinquaginta marcas sterlingorum donavit et tradidit, quas ab eodem recognoscimus nos habuisse et recepisse, in duabus cistis conservandas, una videlicet ducentarum marcarum, alia quinquaginta marcarum; quarum una, quæ erit ducentarum marcarum, in utilitatem Magistrorum et Scholarium Universitatis prædictæ convertetur sub forma inferius annotata, alia sub eadem forma; hoc adjecto, quod si contingat Universitatem, vel propter litem, vel alias causas, pecunia indigere, præstita cautione sufficienti, possit totam illam summam quinquaginta marcarum, vel partem ejusdem, mutuari: ita [quod] cum denunciatum fuerit custodibus cistæ illius per Cancellarium et Procuratores de Universitatis indigentia instante, vel quæ futura verisimiliter timeatur, ex tunc non liceat custodibus dictæ cistæ quidquam Magistris aut Scholaribus mutuare, quousque per Cancellarium et Procuratores fuerint præmuniti.

[2] Title from C.

In hanc autem formam communem pro utraque[1] cista, Nos, Cancellarius et Magistri prædicti, unanimiter consentimus, videlicet, quod singulis annis, quarta feria post festum Sanctæ Trinitatis, fiat a nobis missa solemnis in perpetuum pro eodem, et quod sacerdos circuiens scholas singulas cum serviente publico, ut fieri solet annuatim, nomen præfati domini Gilberti recitet inter alios Universitatis benefactores.

therefore the Chancellor and Masters issue the following ordinance :— Every year mass shall be said for the soul of the founder of the chest; and his name shall be mentioned with those of the other benefactors of the University.

Item, quod in missis pro benefactoribus in principio resumptionis Magistrorum, et instante cessatione eorundem, ac in processionibus faciendis in omnibus aliis missis communibus Universitatis, fiat memoria pro eodem inter alios benefactores Universitatis.

Also he shall be remembered at the masses celebrated at the commencement and close of every term.

Item, quod iidem custodes eligantur sicut Procuratores Universitatis, et eodem die, secundum formam statutorum super hoc editorum in singulis articulis observatam, ita tamen quod duobus custodibus, quorum alter sit Australis, alter Borealis, adjungatur tertius Non-regens per eosdem electores, qui, usque ad primam electionem Procuratorum sequentem post Paschan, cistæ custodiæ intendere teneantur.

The guardians of the Routhebury chest shall be elected in the same manner as the Proctors of the University, and on the same day; they shall be three in number, one a North-country-man, another a South-country-man, and the third a Non-regent master;

Item, in eadem congregatione dentur auditores computi custodum præcedentium, qui tempore consueto ratiocinia eorundem audire teneantur, et indenturam summas prædictas continentem, una cum excrescentiis novis et antiquis, in prima vel secunda congregatione post auditum computum, Universitati porrigant in communi cista reponendam, per quam poterint custodes ad easdem cistas tunc electi in suo computo onerari.

when they are elected, auditors of the accounts of the outgoing guardians shall be elected, who shall render an account to the University of the state of the fund, &c.

Item, quod limitetur tempus, videliect, annale, infra quod pignora Magistrorum et Scholarium in cista exis-

The ordinances issued for the regulation of other chests shall hold good with respect to the Routhebury chest.

Item, quod statuta seu ordinationes[2] per venerabilem virum bonæ memoriæ Magistrum Simonem de Feversham, quondam Cancellarium Universitatis Oxoniensis, et Magistros Universitatis ejusdem, circa conservationem cistarum et pignorum ad alias cistas pertinentia,[3] et distractionem eorundem edita, dummodo supradictis non sint contraria seu adversa, circa istam cistam in omnibus et per omnia conserventur.

[3] No date is given; but it may be gathered that it was about the year 1320, from the following circumstances: that this ordinance was issued in the chancellorship of John Luterel. Now, from a French and Roman Roll, 11 Edw. II., m. 13, i.e. in the year 1318, we find that the king requests the pope to listen to the business of J. Luterel, Chancellor of the University of Oxford. Again, in a Close Roll, 16 Edw. II., p. 2, m. 12, i.e. in the year 1323, the king commands John Luterel to appear before him at York, to answer to certain accusations arising out of his chancellorship, during his tenure of that office. Thus this statute must fall between the years 1318 and 1323.

[4] This short paragraph is of a different and rather later hand than the preceding or succeeding, and does not properly belong to the ordinance for the Routhebury or Gildford chests.

[5] No ordinance exists relating to this chest; but we find, from Patent Roll, 33 Edw. I., p. 1, m. 19, i.e. in the year 1305, that the executors of William Burnell, late Provost of Wells, have license to give nine shops and a messuage in Oxford to the Master and Scholars of Balliol College. Probably this is the founder of the Burnell chest.

A.D. 1322.

Ad honorem Dei et [1] Beatæ Virginis, et omnium Sanctorum, necnon ad pacem et tranquillitatem Universitatis futuris temporibus firmius observandas, edita fuerunt subscripta statuta, facta congregatione solemni Regentium et Non-regentium in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ Virginis Oxoniæ, tunc existente Cancellario venerabili viro Magistro Henrico de Sowere, necnon existentibus Procuratoribus tunc temporis Magistris Willelmo de Skeltone et Symone Yfhtele,[2] quarto non: Decembris, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo vicesimo secundo.

The Chancellor's office shall be tenable for two years: at the expiration of his term of office, which shall be at the end of term before Whitsuntide, he shall deliver up the seal of the office to the Proctors, either in person, or, if he be absent, by his Commissary;

Statutum est, propter eandem causam propter quam alias proinde fuerat ordinatum, [3] quod Procuratores Universitatis annis singulis suis officiis cederent, quod de biennio in biennium, facta congregatione solemni Magistrorum, die quo cessatio fuerit ante Pentecosten, Cancellarius Universitatis, qui pro tempore fuerit, in ipsa congregatione officio suo cedat, et coram Universitate in eadem congregatione Procuratoribus Universitatis, in signum evidens cessionis factæ, sigillum officii sui tradat; quod si absens fuerit Cancellarius eo tempore, nec præsens fuerit in villa, Commissario suo dictum sigillum mittat, qui, nomine Cancellarii tunc absentis,[4] Procuratoribus illud tradat, necnon et signum nomine Cancellarii, auctoritate statuti, et statim coram congregatione faciat cessionem, et, cessione facta per Cancellarium præsentem, vel per Commissarium ipsius absentis, statim in eadem congregatione more solito ad novam electionem Cancellarii procedatur.

De Magistris mittendis pro confirmatione Cancellarii.

When the Chancellor is elected, one or two Masters with a bedel shall be sent to obtain his confirmation.

Statutum est etiam quod, si Cancellarius in persona sua propria cesserit, priusquam electio denuo facienda totaliter compleatur, nullatenus a congregatione recedat; quod si ipse iterum, vel alius, in Cancellarium eligatur, pro nova commissione habenda, per unum vel duos Magistros ad plus, super hujusmodi negotio ad plenum instructos mittatur; et ipse, vel ipsi nuncii, secum communem habeant servientem, si hoc Magistris regentibus visum fuerit expedire.

De computatione biennii quoad officium Cancellarii.[1]

If the Chancellor from any cause happen to be elected after Whitsuntide, but before Christmas, that year in which he is elected shall count as one of his two years of office: but if he be elected after Christmas and before Whitsuntide, he shall hold office for two full years, reckoning from Whitsuntide after his election.

Statutum est etiam, ut omnis dubitatio de computatione biennii officii Cancellarii sit amota, quod[2] si contingat aliquem eligi in Cancellarium post Pentecosten, ante festum Natalis Domini proximo sequens, a die suæ electionis usque in diem cessationis proximum ante Pentecosten, Cancellario de tempore suo biennali computabitur annus alter, et reliquus ab illo die cessationis ante Pentecosten proximo sequentem: quod si contingat aliquem eligi post Natale Domini in Cancellarium, ante diem cessationis præfatæ proximo sequentis, tunc tempus medium, inter diem electionis et diem proximum cessationis ante Pentecosten, non Quod tenentur Procuratores prosequi si Cancellarius intolerabilis existat.

If the Chancellor be guilty of injustice and will not redress it, it shall be competent to the Proctors to summon a congregation to consider the matter; and the Chancellor shall be informed of the reason wherefore the congregation is held: if it be found that he is justly accused, he shall have three days in which to repair his error; if he fail to do this within the three days, the Proctors shall require him to surrender his seal of office.

Statutum est etiam quod, si Cancellarius, postquam electus fuerit, ante diem quo cedere tenetur officio suo, adeo intolerabilis devenerit, quod de eo, si Universitati Magistris vel Scholaribus injuriatus fuerit, justitiam in Universitate fieri non permittat, statim liceat Procuratoribus Universitatis congregare Regentes cujuscunque facultatis, coram quibus ipsi Procuratores gravamina per Cancellarium illata proponant, quæ si per Cancellarium fuerint confessa,[2] aliterve probata legitime coram congregatione in præsentia Cancellarii, vel in ipsius absentia, dum tamen prius per alterum Procuratorum monitus fuerit de congregatione ob causam hujusmodi facienda, faciat dominus Cancellarius, modo quo Regentes decreverint, quam poterit, gravamina reparari; denunciato sibi decreto Regentium per Procuratores Universitatis: et, si tunc infra triduum noluerit errata corrigere arbitrio seu decreto Regentium, nec desistere ab inceptis, faciant Procuratores congregationem Regentium et Nonregentium, quorum decreto, si non paruerit infra triduum a tempore quo sibi constiterit modo dicto, auctoritate totius Universitatis denuncient ipsi domino Cancellario Procuratores Universitatis, quod infra triduum sequens officio suo cedat, et alteri Procuratorum

Cum ex casibus fortuitis plura pericula ex dissipatione[3] bonorum communium Universitatis,[4] in futurumque timemus poterint imminere, statutum est quod postquam aliquis fuerit in Procuratorem Universitatis electus, juramentum præstet corporale, quod de omnibus recipiendis ex parte Universitatis fidelem computum reddat, nec ab Universitate recedat, quousque de omnibus receptis dictæ Universitati satisfecerit, finali computo persoluto, nisi in casu quo procuratorem sufficienter instructum præsentem habuerit paratum, coram judicibus ad hoc specialiter deputatis, ad omnia et singula facienda, quæ in persona propria facere teneretur;[5] qui quidem judices, ad alterius Procuratoris vocationem, ad audiendum ratiocinia antedicta cum effectu in eadem congregatione juramento corporali sint astricti.

The Proctors shall swear that they will render a faithful account of all the receipts of the University and that they will not leave the University without having first performed this duty,

Letter of David, Bishop of Saint David's, to the University of Oxford, on the subject of the riotous conduct of certain of the clergy of his diocese in the University.[1]

David, permissione Divina Menevensis Episcopus, venerabilibus viris Domino Cancellario ac Universitati Magistrorum et Scholarium Oxoniæ Lincolniensis Diœcesis, salutem et sinceram in Domino caritatem.

Quærentes in agro scholasticæ disciplinæ scientiæ margaritam non immerito quo possumus favore prosequimur, eaque libenter eis concedimus, per quæ, materia submota gravaminis, ipsorum pacis tranquillitas prosperetur. Hinc est quod, vestris devotis precibus inclinati, cum intellexerimus quod nonnulli, propriæ salutis immemores, cum, propter delicta in Universitate Oxoniæ perpetrata, suspensionis vel executionis[2] sententiis per Cancellarium Universitatis ipsius, [vel] judices inferiores deputatos ab eo, vel per ipsum Cancellarium una cum tota Universitate, quandoque solum Regentium

Having heard that the peace of the University is imperilled by clerks, who have been suspended [from lecturing] or otherwise punished by the Chancellor, leaving Oxford, and thereby defying his power and the authority of the Church, the Bishop of S. David's undertakes, that if any clerks holding benefices in his diocese shall be convicted of dis-

In nomine Domini, Amen. Anno Ejusdem ab incarnatione, secundum cursum et computationem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, millesimo trecentesimo vicesimo quinto, indictione nona, die decimo nono mensis Decembris, reverendus vir et discretus Magister Wilhelmus de Alburwyke sacræ theologiæ professor, ecclesiæque cathedralis Eboracensis præcentor, et Universitatis Oxoniæ Lincolniensi diœcesi Cancellarius, in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ Oxoniæ prædictæ, in mei, Matthæi notarii publici, et testium subscriptorum præsentia ad hoc specialiter vocatorum et rogatorum, pro tribunali sedens, Wilhelmum de Burcestre, tunc villæ Oxoniæ prædictæ Majorem, præsentialiter inibi existentem, propter suum manifestum contemptum eidem domino Cancellario et Universitati prædictæ, ut continebatur,[2] contractum seu perpetratum, eo quod collistrigium seu pillorium villæ seu municipii Oxoniæ a loco debito et antiquitus consucto ad locum novum et insolitum, irrequisito consensu Cancellarii et Universitatis Oxoniæ prædictæ, et contra inhibitionem dicti Magistri Wilhelmi tunc, ut præmittitur, Cancellarii, ut asserebatur, amovit seu amoveri fecit, in scriptis excommunicavit sub hac forma. A.D. 1325. The Chancellor summoned the Mayor of Oxford to appear before him, to answer a charge of contempt of his authority, in having moved the pillory from its ancient and accustomed place, without first obtaining the consent of the said Chancellor and of the University, and in defiance of an inhibition issued by him; and excommunicated the said Mayor in the following form:—

In Dei nomine, Amen. "Nos, Cancellarius Universi- "tatis Oxoniæ te, Wilhelmum de Burcestre, propter The form of excommunication.

[1] STATUTUM DE JURAMENTO ILLORUM QUI LICENTIANDI SUNT AD LECTURAM ORDINARIAM DECRETALIUM.

Hereafter all who are licensed to read decretals shall, before receiving such licence, swear to observe all the statutes made for the preservation of the peace of the University;

Item, pro pace Universitatis servanda, statuit et decrevit quod licentiandi de cætero ad lecturam ordinariam decretalium in hac Universitate, priusquam ad hujusmodi lecturam per Cancellarium admittantur, jurent coram congregatione Magistorum regentium super sancta Dei evangelia, se servaturos in personis suis omnia statuta et singula edita de pace servanda, quæ inceptoribus universis in suis inceptionibus per Procuratores publice legi solent; si qui vero, tempore hujus editionis statuti, licentiati vel admissi fuerint ad dictam lecturam, nec alias coram Universitate quale præmittitur præstiterint juramentum, et ipsi coram congregatione, cum per Cancellarium et Procuratores fuerint requisiti, sint jurati: quod si jurare noluerint requisiti, a lectura sua auctoritate istius statuti, donec, ut præmissum est, juraverint, sint suspensi.

and all who may have been so licensed before the making of the present statute, shall, unless they have already been sworn, be liable to be called upon to take the same oath, under pain of being suspended from reading.

Item, cum nuper quidam in hac Universitate, de suis multiplicatis viribus præsumentes, ab ipsa Universitate petiverint nonnulla fieri, quæ rationi et æquitati consona minime videbantur, ac ipsa Universitas ad instantiam eorumdem quædam ordinaverit vel statuerit, quæ alias spontanea voluntate minime statuisset, Nos, Cancellarius Universitatis prædictæ, de consensu et ordinatione communi Magistrorum, tam regentium quam non-regentium, ea omnia et singula, quæ alias ad prædictam instantiam per Universitatem fuerint edita vel concessa, vel per ipsos, vel eorum aliquem proposita vel petita, simpliciter revocamus, quassamus, reprobamus, necnon et ea omnia et singula inania et irrita ab initio [1] esse pronunciamus in his scriptis.

Certain influential persons having by means of their influence obtained graces from the University, which would never have been granted except under such unjust influence, the Chancellor and Masters hereby cancel and annul all such concessions whatsoever.

Statuit etiam Universitas prædicta quod nullus de manifestis perturbatoribus pacis, qui, anno proxime prælibato, in tantum pacem perturbaverunt, quod Universitas fere ad plenum fuisset dispersa, de cætero gaudeat privilegiis Universitatis, vel ad statum aliquem admittatur in ipsa, donec Universitati pro suis delictis satisfecerit competenter.

None of those turbulent persons, who were lately the cause of the University being almost deserted, shall henceforth enjoy any privilege of the University, unless they shall have made due satisfaction for their outrages.

[4] From the matter of this set of statutes not much information can be derived as to their date. The cessation of lectures, however, and the reporting of the names of offending clerks to the Diocesan, seem to point to the conclusion that these statutes were made after some disturbance which had its origin among the members of the University, and not from dissensions with the Town. From their juxtaposition with other statutes in C. and D. (the most reliable of the MSS. as to dates), they would appear to belong to the year 1327, or thereabouts; and this date corresponds with a great controversy between the University and the Archdeacon of Oxford, which was finally settled in the year 1345–6.

The Settlement of a doubtful Point by the University and the Vicar of S. Peter's in the East.

At the funeral of a monk of Canterbury at S. Peter's in the East in Oxford, the Chancellor, being present with the regent Masters, and offering at the celebration of mass, entered a protest, then and there, against this act being considered to establish a precedent that the University should offer at mass for the souls of religions who might die members of the University.

Three guardians of this chest shal be elected every winter on the day after the feast of S. Nicholas, and, on the same day, the Proctors shall appoint auditors of the accounts of the guardians of the preceding year, who shall audit the accounts within the month ensuing, and furnish a written report of the state of the funds to the University; and this report shall be deposited in the chest.

Item, quod nulli communitati vel personæ præstetur mutuum de sorte prædictæ cistæ vel ejus excrescentiis, nisi sub reali pignore, quod, nisi infra annum a tempore mutui accepti vel facti luatur, statim, proclamatione publica per scholas præcedente, saltem infra mensem post superannuationem, si vacatio tempore superannuationis non fuerit, distrahatur; quod si tempore superannuationis vacatio fuerit, tunc infra primum mensem proximi termini sequentis pignus hujusmodi, proclamatione communi, ut præmittitur, præcedente,[7]

In the case of such suits, one or two persons, whom the Chancellor, with consent of one of the Proctors, shall deem fit, shall be appointed to act for the University as their proctor, and shall be entrusted with full powers.

Item, ordinavit dicta congregatio quod deputentur per Cancellarium et Procuratores, vel Procuratorem altero dissentiente, duodecim personæ, vel viginti quatuor, de Universitate, secundum quod in consimilibus consuetum est fieri, ad ordinandum quomodo dicta appellationis causa debeat defendi, ac etiam de sumptibus et omnibus aliis dictam causam appellationis concernentibus, vice et nomine totius Universitatis.

A committee of twelve or twenty-four persons shall be appointed to consider what is the best way of conducting the appeal, and of meeting the expenses thereof, &c.

Item, ordinavit eadem congregatio Regentium et Non-regentium quod Universitas debeat tueri et defendere Cancellarium in causa appellationis prædictæ.

The University considers itself bound to defend the Chancellor in the said appeal.

Item, ut litium materia amputetur et Universitas relevetur[2] a sumptibus et expensis, placet Universitati Regentium et Non-regentium submittere, quoad[3] omnia acta in congregatione Regentium et Non-regentium, celebrata in vigilia S. [1] There are two copies of this document, in A. and D.; in the former the first few lines are wholly obliterated, and therefore the date is lost. The text is from D., and here both decimo and anno quarto must be wrong; for Clement VI. began to reign on the 19th of May 1342, and died 6th of December 1352.

There is a fragment, apparently of the same document, in C.C. [in the Cotton Library, Claudius D. 8], but with the date 1355; also in Hare's Collection of the Privileges of the University of Oxford, there is a document to the same effect, with the date 1355. This is, however, a clerical error; probably for anno quarto, die tertia decima, in the text, we should read anno tertio, die quarta decima, since February 1345 would be in the third year of Clement VI.

Since the regent Masters are bound to attend divine service, and it is fit that they should use becoming vestments, it is hereby ordered that the vestments and other things used in divine service shall be kept in the University chest, and never lent for any purpose except the funeral masses for Masters and Scholars.

Cum Universitas Regentium interesse divinis officiis, tam pro vivis quam pro mortuis, diversis anni vicibus, frequentius astringatur, ac decens sit et honestum quod hujusmodi divina officia in vestimentis ac ornamentis decentibus ministrantur, ordinatum est quod tam vestimenta quam panni seriei, et alia quæcumque divinum officium concernentia, in cista Universitatis per se honeste et debite reponantur, nec quovis modo sine consensu majoris partis Regentium alii usui quam Universitatis per Procuratores liberentur seu commodentur, funerationibus Scholarium et Magistrorum duntaxat exceptis, et tunc demum honestioribus reservatis, præterquam in funerationibus Regentis vel Non-regentis, quia alias per processum temporis, consumptis vestimentis, quæ jam habet, Universitas[1] possit destrui in futurum.

The profits of the baker.

Et sciendum est, quod in ista assisa potest pistor luerari in quolibet quarterio frumenti, ut probatum est per pistores domini Regis, tres denarios furfur suum, et duos[1] panes de furnagio; et quatuor servientibus unum denarium, oboum; et duobus garcionibus quadrantem; in sale obolum; in busca tres denarios; in boletello locando obolum.

[1] duo, MS.

The price of bread shall not be raised or lowered, unless a rise or fall in the price of a quarter of wheat to the amount of sixpence shall have taken place.

Sciendum est etiam, quod non mutatur assisa panis, nisi pro sex denariis crescentibus et decrescentibus, et hoc pro quarterio frumenti venditi.

Et sciendum, quod quum quarterium frumenti venditur pro tribus solidis vel pro quadraginta denariis, et quarterium hordei[1] pro viginti denariis vel pro duobus solidis, et quarterium avenæ pro sedecim denariis vel pro octodecim denariis, tunc debent et bene possunt brasiatrices vendere in civitatibus duas[2] gallonas cervisiæ ad unum denarium.

The price of a gallon of beer.

Assisa panis, secundum quod continetur in scriptis de mareschantia domini Regis, iis liberata contineatur secundum venditionem frumenti, scilicet melioris secundi et tertii: tam wastalli quam alii panes ponderentur cujuscunque oneris, sicut supradictum est, per mediam venditionem frumenti, tunc non mutatur assisa sive pondus nisi per sex denarios crescentes vel decrescentes in venditione quarterii frumenti.

A baker selling loaves of short weight to be fined, or to undergo the pillory.

Pistor, cum inveniatur panis suus de quadra in defectu ponderis duorum solidorum vel infra, amercietur; et, si numerum illum excedat, subeat judicium pilloriæ, et non remittatur[3] judicium delinquenti, neque pro auro neque pro argento. Et quilibet pistor habeat signum suum proprium super quodlibet genus panium suorum. Pilloria sive collistrigium tumbrelli continue habeantur debitæ fortitudinis, ita quod delinquentes exequi possunt judicium sine corporis periculo.

Every baker must mark his loaves, with his peculiar stamp.

Pillories to be made strong, that the delinquent's safety be not imperilled.

The Mayor, Bailiffs, and citizens of Oxford bind themselves and their successors to pay to the University every year one hundred marks, to be delivered at S. Mary's church on S. Scholastica's day;

Noverint universi quod nos, Major et Ballivi ac tota communitas villæ Oxoniensis, pro finali concordia facta super quodam conflictu, inter clericos et laicos in villa prædicta nuper suborto, obligamus nos et successores nostros, Majores et Ballivos ac communitatem prædictam in perpetuum, Cancellario et Procuratoribus Universitatis Oxoniæ, et successoribus suis Cancellario et Procuratoribus, et Universitati prædictæ in perpetuum, in centum marcis annui redditus, solvendis eisdem vel eorum certo attornato annuatim apud Oxoniam in Ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ, in festo S. Scholasticæ Virginis, sine ulteriori dilatione: ad quam quidem solutionem fideliter faciendam obligamus nos et successores nostros Majores et Ballivos et communitatem villæ Oxoniensis, et omnia bona nostra et communitatis villæ prædictæ habita et habenda, districtioni prædictorum Cancellarii et Procuratorum, qui pro tempore fuerint, et ministrorum suorum, necnon coercioni cujuscunque judicis ecclesiastici seu sæcularis. In cujus rei testimonium sigillum commune communitatis prædictæ præsentibus est appensum.

and they submit their property to distress for the purpose of making the above payment.

Datum apud Oxoniam, quinto-decimo die Maii, anno regni Regis Edwardi, tertii post conquestum, Angliæ tricesimo primo, et Franciæ decimo octavo.

Indenture between the University and Town of Oxford to relax the foregoing obligation.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus, ad quos præsens scriptum indentatum pervenerit, Cancellarius et Procuratores Universitatis Oxoniensis, et tota Universitas prædicta, salutem in Domino.

The University agree by this indenture that, although the Townsmen be bound to pay annually one hundred marks, yet, if the said Townsmen shall fulfil all the other conditions of their annual compensation, then they shall stand excused from the payment of the one hundred marks, for every year in which they shall have so fulfilled the said conditions.

Licet Major et Ballivi villæ Oxoniensis, et tota communitas ejusdem villæ, et successores sui, nobis Cancellario et Procuratoribus Universitatis Oxoniensis, et successoribus nostris, et Universitati prædictæ, in perpetuum obligentur in centum marcis annui redditus, solvendis apud Oxoniam annuatim in Ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ in festo S. Scholasticæ Virginis, pro quadam finali concordia nobiscum facta super quodam conflictu inter clericos et laicos in villa prædicta nuper suborto, prout in ipsorum scripto obligatorio inde confecto plenius continetur, volumus tamen et concedimus Nos, prædicti Cancellarius et Procuratores, ac tota Universitas, pro nobis et successoribus nostris in perpetuum, quod si prædicta communitas villæ Oxoniensis, pro animabus Scholarium et aliorum in dicto conflictu occisorum, unam missam anniversariam in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ Oxoniæ in festo S. Scholasticæ Virginis annuatim faciat celebrari, modo et forma quibus in quadam indentura, inter nos et dictam communitatem de materia ipsa facta, plenius continetur, et omnes insuper alii articuli in eadem indentura contenti ex parte dictæ communitatis, quolibet anno debite fuerint observati, quod pro illo anno prædictæ centum marcæ nullatenus exigantur; pro aliis vero annis ipso scripto obligatorio suo robore et efficacia in perpetuum duraturo. In cujus rei testimonium tam sigillum nostrum commune Universitatis prædictæ, quam sigillum commune communitatis prædictæ, huic indenturæ alternatim sunt appensa.

Ordinatio Universitatis de fratre, qui quodammodo dehonestavit quendam doctorem. D. 54.

A.D. 1357. A certain Bachelor of Theology, having in one of his lectures publicly ridiculed Master John Bodi, monk of Canterbury, appeared before a committee appointed by the University, and submitted himself to their sentence, which was that he should go to the house of every doctor of Theology, and ask pardon, and also make a retractation and apology, as public as his insult had been.

Memorandum quod die Mercurii in vigilia S. Thomæ Apostoli, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo quinquagesimo septimo, coram certis deputatis per Universitatem comparuit Bachalarius in theologia ordinis,[1] qui ordinationi Universitatis pure et spontanee se submisit, ad subeundum pœnam per Universitatem sibi infligendam, quia in quadam replicatione[2] sententias materiam prius tactam per reverendum doctorem Magistrum Johannem Bodi, monachum ecclesiæ Christi Cantuariensis, tetig[it,[3] quod[4] Magistrum Johannem per verba impropria[5] dehonestavit, dictumque Magistrum Johannem in lectione sua publice contempsit; qua submissione præhabita, taliter fuerat ordinatum, et a Cancellario dicto fratri injunctum, quod a quolibet doctore theologiæ humiliter peteret veniam domo sua, et quod in proxima replicatione sua publice proclamata, fateretur[6] se publice deliquisse, et quod honestaret personam quantum prius alias dehonestavit, sub pœna incidendi in suspensionem, qua propter præmissa prius fuit suspensus.

tempore Magistri Humfridi de Charletone Cancellarii, existentibus etiam Procuratoribus Magistris Johanne Joselyn et Alexandro de Fferybryg.

Statutum est, quod nullus de cætero, quem gradus magistralis artium minime decoravit, ad opponendum in theologia publice præsentetur, nisi prius ad personalem requisitionem et instantiam sic præsentari volentis per Cancellarium et Procuratores Universitatis a doctore proprio ejusdem ordinis et Regente. Si præsentandus religiosus fuerit et proprium habeat doctorem, collatio habeatur singularis et inquisitio specialis de ejusdem scientia liberali, ætatis maturitate, morum gravitate, staturæ decentia, ac cæteris, quæ talis personæ congruunt honestati. Quod si in præmissis vel aliquo præmissorum minus idoneus vel insufficiens reputetur ad opponendum in dicta facultate, nullatenus præsentetur. Si vero præsentandus, ut præmittitur, doctorem ejusdem ordinis et Regentem contingat proprium non habere, per alium doctorem[1] plenam in præmissis dicti præsentandi notitiam sub debito juramenti se firmantem habere, præmissa omnia et singula diligentius compleantur, sic quod dicti Procuratores in scientialibus non opponant.

Before presentation to opponency in theology, special inquiry shall be made as to the person to be presented, whether he be sufficiently learned, of proper age, good morals, becoming stature, and the like, and, if he be thought deficient in any of these particulars, he shall not be presented.

C. 57. Statute to prevent the abduction of boys by the Mendicant Friars.

[4] As far as the MSS. are concerned, there is nothing to give more than a very vague clue to the date of this statute. In C. it occurs next after one of the year 1252; in D. also there is nothing to mark the date with certainty, though the other statutes in that MS. which are in juxtaposition with this, are of about the date given here. I have not, however, hesitated to assign the date given by Antony-a-Wood, on the ground that the circumstances of the period point it out as most probably correct. Ed.

No monk, not having been a Regent in Arts, of whatever order he may be, shall be allowed to read "the Sentences," until after a year of opponency duly performed.

Item, statutum est, quod nullus qui prius in artibus non rexerit, cujuscunque ordinis fuerit, de cætero lecturam libri sententiarum aggredi præsumat, quousque per annum integrum opposuerit, rite et publice in disputationibus ordinariis Magistrorum, nullo alio ejusdem ordinis interim opponente, ut sibi cedat pro forma, consuetudini autem approbatæ, quoad religiosos possessionatos, super[2] concursu opponendi et legendi eum seipsis aut aliis quibuscunque, nec super tempore, præsenti statuto nullatenus intendimus derogare.[3]

A.D. 1357–8?

If any person shall obtain letters [from influential people] for the purpose of extorting graces or dispensations of any sort from the University, he shall be held incapable of taking any degree.

Item, statutum est, quod quilibet, qui prius in Universitate non rexerit in aliqua facultate, literas qualescunque et quovismodo pro gratia aliqua ab Universitate Regentium seu Regentium et Non-regentium habenda, quin potius extorquenda, pro aliquo gradu scholastico obtinendo in eadem, aut super dispensatione formæ, vel pro actu aliquo pertinente ad gradum talem, contra statuta et consuetudines Universitatis hactenus usitatas, de cætero impetravit, et eis visus fuerit quovismodo, eo ipso sit inhabilis ad omnem gradum habitum et habendum in Universitate, cum quo sic inhabilitato non liceat ullo tempore dispensare.

[1] Title not in C. or D. This statute would appear, from its position in D., to be of the year 1357; but a note on the margin, of the same age as the MS., observes: "Istud statutum fuit declaratum tempore Toulworth et Derby, prout continetur in ista clausula 'Consuetudini,' &c.;" i.e. 1358.

De nominibus "Doctorum cereorum." D. 53.

Hæc sunt nomina "doctorum cereorum" tempore Magistrorum Ricardi Toulworth, et Roberti Derby, Procuratorum Universitatis Oxoniensis; et vocantur tales doctores, qui gratias ab Universitate per literas dominorum cera signatas extorquere nituntur, vel aliter quia, sicut cera a facie ignis fluit, sic ipsi asperitatem studii fugiunt et laborem. Sed sciendum quod semper tales doctores cerei in Universitate Oxoniensi sunt de ordinibus Mendicantium, cujus rei causam invenimus; nam [1]pomis et potu, ut populus fabulatur, puerulos ad religionem attrahunt et instigant, quos professos non instruunt, sicut exigit ætas illa, sed mendicationis discursibus permittunt intendere, atque tempus, quo possint addiscere, captandis favoribus amicorum, dominarum et dominorum, sinunt[2] consumere, in offensam parentium, puerorum periculum, et ordinis detrimentum; sicque nimirum contingit quod, qui parvuli discere minime cogebantur inviti, grandiores effecti docere præsumunt, indigni penitus et indocti, et minor error in primo maximus fit in fine, nam sic succrescit in grege divino laicorumque multitudo . . . onerosa, qui tamen se ad prædicationis officium tanto improbius ingerunt, quanto minus ea [quæ] loquuntur intelligunt, in con-

The "Wax-doctors" are so called, because they have obtained degrees by extorting them through the influence of great people, whose letters are sealed with wax; or perhaps because the learning of these doctors will not bear examination any better than wax will bear the fire.

The "Wax-doctors" are always to be found in Oxford, being persons who have been induced in early youth to join the Mendicant friars, and whose education has been therefore neglected, while they have been taught to curry favour with the great, by which art they win their way to degrees, instead of by the regular method:

REVOCATIO QUÆDAM, FACTA PER J. FRATREM.

A.D. 1358.

Friar John ——, is condemned to read publicly, at S. Mary's church on Sunday immediately after the University sermon, the underwritten form of recantation, videlicet quod legeret palam et publice revocationem infrascriptam, nec addendo, nec diminuendo, nec aliqua verba[1] ddo in publico in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ Virginis Oxoniæ, die Dominica proxima post festum S. Frideswydæ proximum sequens, statim post sermonem Universitatis, quem non ipse sed alius faceret illo die. Et ad hoc fuit prædictus Johannes juratus, in præsentia et de licentia sui Principalis et aliorum doctorum, et Priorum dicti ordinis.

A marginal note by a later hand, probably Twyne's, writes Jo: Wicklif; and then another, by another hand, adds, non accedo, Wiclifus enim "frater" non erat, sed eorum impugnator, si quis alius, accerimus.

and to pay one hundred shillings to the University.

Item, ordinatum fuit per deputatos, quod nunquam exerceret actum doctoratus in Universitate Oxoniensi, nisi habita licentia Cancellarii et singulorum doctorum in theologia, et Procuratorum qui pro tempore fuerint, et omnia ista et quodlibet istorum admisit in præsentia sui Principalis,[2] et de licentia sua, pro satisfactione delictorum commissorum erga Universitatem, et est monitus sub forma juris per Cancellarium, sub pœna excommunicationis, ad complendum omnia prædicta loco et tempore, ut præmittitur, citatus fuit ad comparendum in crastino Dominici supradicti, ad dicendum quare excommunicari non debeat, si non compleverit omnia supradicta.

Also it is determined that he shall never, without special licence, be allowed to lecture in theology.

Et ista pœnitentia non fuit immerito sibi inflicta, eo quod in quadam determinatione sua[3] hyemali anno supradicto dixit expresse, prout schola certitudinaliter reportavit, quod decimæ ecclesiarum magis debentur mendicantibus quam rectoribus earumdem.

This was his just punishment for having in his school declared that—

(1) Tithes belong more justly to the Mendicant friars than to rectors of churches;

Item, quod rex a clericis et viris ecclesiasticis male et inordinate viventibus absque injuria possessiones posset auferre.

(2) The King has the right of depriving ecclesiastics of their temporalities;

(3) The University is a school of heresy.

Item, istam Universitatem vocavit "gymnasium " hæreticorum."

Tenor schedulæ lectæ seu revocationis talis erat.

Reverend doctors,— I am very sorry for what I have said, and I hereby affirm, that—

"Reverendi domini astantes et singuli, in determinatione quadam, termino[1] hyemali ultimo præterito facta, materias aliquas determinando tractavi odiosas quam plurimis et displicentes, et præcipue matris nostræ Universitatis nimium offensivas, de quo dolens et anxius fui tempore non modico, verum pro meo posse satisfacere cupiens, in hac parte de mandato ejusdem Universitatis venerabilis dicam in scripto;—

(1) The University is firmly established in the Catholic faith, and a defender thereof;

"Imprimis, quod istam matrem nostram Universitatem venerabilem scio Catholicam esse, in doctrina sana fundatam et sanæ fidei protectricem; and that the doctors therein are true Catholics;

"Item, doctores reverendos ejusdem esse catholicos viros dico et affirmo; and I ask pardon from all and each separately, for having troubled the University by what I said, and by appealing to several great people, and I am ready to make amends to the extent of my power;

"Item, quod prædictam matrem nostram et reverendos doctores et magistros, et præcipue dominum Cancellarium et Procuratores pluries offendi, humilius quo possum ab eisdem veniam peto una voce; et quia totam Universitatem indebite vexavi, improvide appellando, dominis et magnatibus querelando, et aliis multiplicibus expensis gravando, ideo ire ad satisfactionem offero juxta vires; and I hereby retract the opinions I am reported to have expressed about tithes, and about the deprivation of ecclesiastics by the King,

"Item, quia plures valentes me reportaverunt in determinatione prædicta dixisse, asseruisse, et determinasse, quod quicumque domini temporales pro suo libito absque auctoritate Ecclesiæ possunt aliqua temporalia Deo et ecclesiis donata auferre ab eisdem et perpetuo revocare;

[1] The MS. has vero or some similar word. termino is probably the correct reading.

" Item, quod decimæ Ecclesiæ magis sunt debitæ
" fratribus mendicantibus quam rectoribus et curatis;
" Idcirco prædictas quæstiones de temporalibus et
" decimis erroneas et falsas esse dico, earumque contra-

" tivas, et earum quamlibet, tamquam minus catholicas
" ex nunc et in perpetuum detestor, nec eas vel
" earum aliquam de cætero aliquo modo sustinebo,
" tacite vel expresse."

and I affirm the contradictory of those opinions to be true, and I promise that I will never for the future either openly or secretly maintain them.

De briga inter fratrem et Sophistas.

Eodem anno, termino quadragesimali, cum quidam frater prædicator contra Sophistas prædicasset, oriebatur briga inter ipsum et Sophistas, cum quibus dictus frater tandem sic convenit, scilicet, quod in uno sermone in eodem loco ad libitum Sophistarum alias faciendo, verba diceret infrascripta, quod et postea factum est.

A certain preaching friar having attacked the "Sophists" in his sermon, a great quarrel ensued between him and them, and he was obliged to make a retractation in another sermon, as follows,—

Tenor talis erat.

Cum alias in hoc[1] loco prædicarem, in prædicatione mea distinxi de quadruplici sapientia, videlicet, sub forma tali, "aliqui volunt esse sapientes ut videantur, " aliqui tantum ut sciant, aliqui ut dicantur, [ali- " qui][2] ut veritatem imitentur," in primo puncto illius divisionis dixi, quod "studentes sapientiæ 'ut " 'videantur' non possunt attingere statum veræ sa- " pientiæ, qui sunt isti? nolo dicere quod sunt " Sophistæ," insipienter et incircumspecte et indocte in locutione mea dans intelligere quasi ii essent Sophistæ, qui student in artibus, quod nullo modo debuissem, et quare inter omnes artes et scientias hæc est singulariter commendanda, sicut janua et apertura ad omnes

I did not intend, by what I foolishly and thoughtlessly said, to detract from the study of Arts, which is the basis of all studies, and I trust nothing I may have said will deter students from that most honourable and profitable course.

Quantum igitur ad studentes in arte illa, dico quod student in arte in qua est necessarium, pernitile, et honorabile studere, non solum ipsissimis, sed et omnibus parentibus et amicis eorum; et absit quod propter verbum meum, quod non est verbum virtutis vel auctoritatis, vel propter cujuscumque alterius, aliquis esset retractus ab amore illius artis.

C. 26. Statute to oblige tailors to cut the Academical dress in due form.[1]

Tailors shall cut the academical dress in due form according to ancient custom, allowing sufficient length of robes for the Masters and Bedels, for it is only reasonable that the clergy, who are distinguished from the laity by mental gifts, should have a corresponding distinction in their dress; and therefore any tailor offending against this statute shall be imprisoned until he shall have made reparation.

and every year on the festival of S. John, "at the Latin gate," mass "of the dead," shall be solemnly performed in his honour, and all Regent masters shall be summoned to attend thereat; and every year guardians of the chest, in which the said money is kept, shall be appointed.

The University shall not be allowed to apply any of the said money to its own uses.

When the guardians of the chest are elected, auditors of the accounts shall be appointed by the Proctors, and they shall be obliged to audit the accounts within one month from their appointment, and to furnish to the Proctors an indenture stating the condition in which they find the funds, which indenture shall be deposited in the chest.

Item, quod nulli communitati vel personæ præstetur mutuum de sorte dictæ cistæ vel ejus excrescentiis, nisi sub reali pignore, quod, nisi infra annum a tempore mutui accepti vel facti luatur, statim, proclamatione publica per scholas præcedente, saltem infra mensem post superannuationem, si vacatio tempore superannuationis non fuerit, distrahatur; quod si tempore superannuationis vacatio fuerit, tunc infra primum mensem proximi termini sequentis, pignus hujusmodi, proclamatione communi, ut præmittitur, præcedente, venditioni publicæ exponatur, ita quod cum pignus venditum fuerit, retenta cistæ summa, mutui residuum pretii, si quid fuerit, impignoranti solvatur.

No society or individual shall borrow from the capital or accumulation of this fund without first depositing a pledge, which shall be sold, after a month's public notice by proclamation in all the Schools, if not redeemed within a year.

C. 57.

Item, quod in præfata cista sit registrum, in quo, annis singulis, instante computo per custodes computum reddituros, scribantur sigillatim nomina illorum quibus debebuntur excrescentiæ de pignoribus venditis anno illo, videlicet, post ultimum computum præcedentem, una cum summis excrescentiarum debitarum singulis eorumdem; quæ scriptura per auditores computi examinetur, ut concordet cum summa novarum excrescentiarum inserenda indenturæ super illo computo faciendæ, ne quis, cujus pignus ultra summam mutui per ipsum de cista accepti venditum forsan fuerit, per custodum cistæ injuriam seu negligentiam debitis sibi excrescentiis defraudetur.[1]

A register shall be kept in the chest, in which shall be written the names of those to whom money is due from the sale of pledges, and it shall be examined by the auditors each year, to make sure that no one is defrauded of his due;

Cum autem excrescentiæ sic in registro descriptæ, illi, cui debebuntur, fuerint persolutæ, scriptura ipsas concernens cancelletur in præfato registro, ita tamen ut videri possit quod fuerit ibi scriptum, cancellatæ vero hujusmodi scripturæ per auditores proximi computi [1] sequentis examinentur,[2] ut concordent cum summa exerescentiarum, quas custodes coram eis allegabunt de temporibus suam administrationem præcedentibus se solvisse, ne forte in posterum eædem exerescentiæ indebite persolvantur.[3]

Every month during full term the guardians shall visit the chest, after proclamation made in the usual way in all the Schools.

Item, quod quolibet [4] mense pleni termini teneantur dicti custodes dictam cistam visitare, proclamatione more solito per scholas publice præcedente.

The Warden of Merton Hall, or of any other similar hall at present existing or hereafter to exist in the University, and any Master or Scholar may borrow from the said chest in the following proportions:—

a Warden, for the use of his hall, may borrow sixty shillings;—

a Master, actually studying in Oxford, forty shillings;—

a Bachelor, actually studying, two marks;—

a Scholar, one mark.

More than this no one may borrow.

No one, not actually studying, may borrow from this fund.

Item, quod custodes et præpositi, seu alii generalem et liberam administrationem Aulæ de Mertone, et aularum similium præsentium et futurarum in Universitate eadem, habentes, quilibet etiam Magister vel Scholaris usque ad summas infra distinctas gaudere possit beneficio hujusmodi cistæ, videlicet, quilibet custos et præpositus seu generalis administrator cujuslibet aulæ aularum prædictarum usque ad sexaginta solidos, ad omnem utilitatem cujuslibet aularum earumdem; quilibet etiam Magister, dum tamen sit studens in Universitate prædicta, usque ad quadraginta solidos, Baehilarius similiter studens usque ad duas marcas, et Scholaris usque unam maream,[5] vero ultra distinctionem prædictam nulli aulæ vel personæ præstetur mutuum ex sorte cistæ prædictæ vel ejus exerescentiis quocunque colore. Cæteris vero communitatibus non-studentium et personis qui [6] Scholares non fuerint, nihil penitus de cista illa valeat mutuari: per beneficium vero hujus cistæ nulli communitati vel personæ, quoad aliarum cistarum beneficia, derogetur.

Item, quod nullum pignus de cista prædicta venditioni expositum, sive de voluntate impignorantis infra annum, sive per custodes cistæ post annum, cuiquam ad examinationem vel inspectionem tradatur, nisi corporale præstiterit juramentum, quod pignus hujusmodi non accipit fraudulenter ad impediendum vel differendum venditionem illius. Ad hujusmodi vero juramenta exigenda singuli librarii seu stationarii Universitatis specialiter astringantur.

No one shall be allowed to take away for inspection a pledge exposed for sale, unless he first make oath that he does not do so to hinder the sale thereof.

Item, quod qui pignus venditioni expositum ad inspectionem vel examinationem habere voluerit, aliud pignus excedens pretium pignoris venalis secundum [1] æstimationem stationarii seu librarii venditoris eidem exponat, et sic pignus venale ad examinationem per octo dies licenter habeat, quod si infra dictos octo dies pretium constitutum super pignore venali eidem stationario non solverit, nec ipsum venale pignus eidem restituerit, ex tunc pignus ejus sic stationario expositum remaneat cistæ in statu prioris pignoris obligatum; ita videlicet quod per custodes cistæ pretio constituto venditioni exponatur, sicut de pignoribus superannuatis fieri consuevit, quo vendito reservetur summa mutui principalis, et, si quid residuum fuerit, assignetur ei, qui primum pignus exposuit, summa in qua pretium super ejus pignore constitutum excedit summam mutui principalis, et, si adhuc præter aliquid superfuerit, illud ei, qui pignus posterius stationario exposuit, assignetur, et sic fiat singulis impignorantibus quod justum est.

Any one so removing a pledge shall deposit another pledge of superior value in the opinion of the stationer; but on depositing such superior pledge he shall be allowed to take the other pledge for inspection, and to keep it eight days, and if he does not restore it within that time his pledge shall be kept instead thereof, and it shall be liable to be sold in the same way as the other pledges.

Item, quod quicumque exponentes pignora, sive pro pecunia dictæ cistæ, sive pro aliis pignoribus venditioni expositis, et ad inspectionem seu examinationem receptis, jurent se potestatem habere taliter obligandi pignora quæ exponunt.

All persons who deposit pledges, shall make oath that they have the right of disposing of the property.

[1] ex estimationem, C.

No one may act as deputy for a guardian of the chest, except a Master or Bachelor, and such deputies shall be held responsible at the audits for their principals.

Item, quod nullus custodum dictæ cistæ administrationem suam committat nisi Magistro vel Bacallario Universitati jurato, qui etiam, tempore ratiociniorum reddendorum, nomine custodis cujus vices gesserit, ipso absente, una cum reliquis custodibus vel eorum substitutis, si et ipsi absentes fuerint, tanquam procurator in hac parte principalis custodis ad reddenda ratiocinia compellatur, ne per fraudulentas absentationes custodum eorum ratiocinia indebite differantur.[1]

Within one month from the election of the new guardians, the outgoing guardians shall render their account.

Item, quod infra mensem a tempore quo novi custodes electi fuerint et jurati, teneantur custodes priores de sua administratione, coram auditoribus sibi deputatis, plenam reddere rationem, et post mensem prædictum non liceat iis datas impignorationes[2] cujusque pignoris immutare, liceat tamen excrescentias solvere, si infra dictum tempus computum reddiderint iis quibus debebuntur, juxta statuta et consuetudines laudabiles et ordinationes dictæ Universitatis, et pecuniam debitam cistæ exigere et recipere, ac etiam pignora liberare.[3]

Any statutes, heretofore made or hereafter to be made, shall hold good with respect to this chest, so far as they do not contravene the provisions of this ordinance.

Item, quod statuta et ordinationes et consuetudines laudabiles per Cancellarium et Universitatem nostram prædictam facta et in posterum facienda, dum tamen præsenti ordinationi non obvient seu repugnent, circa præfatam cistam ordinamus et volumus observari.

All persons borrowing from this chest shall be bound to say, five times "Pater Noster" and "Ave Maria," for the souls of the founder and of all the faithful departed.

Item, quod quilibet recipiens mutuum de cista prædicta pro anima dicti venerabilis viri, et pro animabus omnium fidelium defunctorum quinquies orationem Dominicam, totiesque salutationem Beatæ Virginis dicere teneatur.

The guardians aforesaid shall, as soon as they are elected,

D. 52. BONUS PROCESSUS DE UNO MONACHO QUI CONTRA VOLUNTATEM PROCURATORUM VELLET INCEPISSE SUB SÆCULARI.

A.D. 1360.

Henry Woodhulle, a monk of Abingdon, wished to incept under a secular, against the will of the abbot of Abingdon, and in contravention of the customs of the University, and was opposed

Memorandum quod, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo sexagesimo, tempore Nicholai de Astone Cancellarii, existentibus Procuratoribus Magistris Ricardo Toulworth et Roberto Derby, oriebatur quædam briga inter Henricum Wodehulle monachum Abyndoniæ ex parte una, et Procuratores prædictos ex altera, eo quod dictus monachus contra voluntatem sui Abbatis, et præcipue contra consuetudines Universitatis rationabiles et honestas, ut dicti Procuratores prætendebant, nitebatur incipere. Præfatus enim monachus sub quodam sæculari inceptionem suam proposuit celebrasse, quod dicti Procuratores dixerunt propter causas diversas fieri non debere, tum quia quilibet possessionatus religiosus, qui unquam in dicta Universitate statum doctoratus assumpsit, per se, aut saltem sub alio religioso ejusdem domus, inceptionem celebravit; tum quia nullus a dicto monacho expensas sumptuosas aut superfluas fieri exigebat; tum quia Abbates plurimi necnon sæculares et alii expensas honestas et in Universitate solitas, in damnum Universitatis et Magistrorum plantarum Ecclesiæ et fidei defensorum, per exemplum facti sui verisimiliter retraxissent, quod etiam possessionati multi et monachi asserebant; tum etiam quia justum judicatur et æquum ut pinguiora beneficia possidentes Ecclesiæ uberiora honores et præmia, ad excitandum alios, illis ostenderent[1] qui in Universitatibus circa Ecclesiæ exaltationem et fidei defensionem sudant ferventius et insistunt; tum quia valentiores Abbates Angliæ de ordine monachorum ejusdem opinionis extiterunt, ut claruit, eo quod impedimento dicti monachi ad consilium domini Regis in auxilium Abbatis Abyndoniæ Londonium accesserunt, unde et Abbas antedictus, reprobans sui monachi modum incipiendi supradictum, prædictis Cancellario et Procuratoribus talem transmisit epistolam.

by the Proctors on several grounds,

First, because no monk had ever done so before.

Second, because no unusually heavy expenses would be incurred by conforming to the usual practice.

Third, because it would establish a precedent, and the consequence would be that less money would be spent in Oxford at inceptions than had hitherto been the case.

Fourth, because it is only fair that those who possess ecclesiastical benefices should spend their money in Oxford for the benefit of those who labour there for the honour of the Church.

Fifth, because many other influential abbots opposed the practice, and went to London to assist the abbot of Abingdon before the king and council in this matter, and the abbot of Abingdon himself wrote the following letter to the University on the subject.

Tenor epistolæ Rogeri[2] Tame.

Litera Abbatis de Abyndone missa contra suum commonachum. D. 52.

Reverendæ discretionis Magistris, domino Cancellario Universitatis Oxoniæ et ejusdem Procuratoribus, Rogerus permissione divina Abbas monasterii Abyndoniæ, salutem.

The archdeacon of Huntingdon and others have requested me to allow Henry Woodhulle to incept under the said archdeacon, but I refused, and write to acquaint you with this circumstance.

Cum nuper quidam venerabiles domini penes me vehementer instarent, et præcipue dominus Archdiaconus Huntyndoniæ, quatenus fratri Henrico de Wodehulle, commonacho nostro, licentiam concederemus, quod sub dicto domino Archidiacono, modo licet insolito, posset incipere, Nos, super hoc habita deliberatione matura, propter quasdam causas rationabiles, primo dicto Henrico, subsequenter [1]eidem domino Archidiacono finaliter respondimus, * * *[2] quod meæ voluntati non fuit nec etiam conscientiæ, quod dicto modo prædictus Henricus inciperet; quia tamen non credimus illam responsionem nostram vobis fuisse certitudinaliter patefactam, certificamus etiam vos quod nos adhuc in eadem voluntate sine variatione quacunque [3]porsistimus: valeatis, etc.

But the Chancellor and some other influential persons in Oxford took the part of the aforesaid monk,

Præterea est sciendum quod, ex parte dicti monachi Cancellarius et quidam magni in Universitate, licet tantum pauci, totis viribus astiterunt, asserentes inceptionem dicti monachi [4]modo supradicto contra Universitatis consuetudines aut commodum non fuisse; ex parte vero altera erant Procuratores,[5] per communitatem excitati, oppositum allegantes, quare dicti Procuratores, pro bona[6] pace, Cancellario et parti adversæ obtulerunt, quod dicta briga amicabiliter et ex consensu per Regentes et Non-regentes fuisset discussa et finaliter terminata, ita quod ipsi ab indignatione[7] aliorum essent exuti, et erga communitatem, cujus sunt Procuratores, publice excusati; quod tamen pars adversa, de communitate dissidens, patenter recusavit, dicens dictam brigam per congregationem Regentium debere terminari, credens majorem partem congregationis Regentium, in qua etiam pauci Regentes extiterant, ad instantiam Cancellarii et aliorum fautorum dicti monachi consensum præbituram, quod et factum est in tantum, quod dictus Cancellarius dictos Pro-wherefore the Proctors, whose opposition was instigated by the people of the town, proposed an amicable arrangement of the difficulty, to which proposal the Chancellor and his side would not consent, desiring the matter to be settled in congregation, where they expected to obtain a majority of the votes, curatores et quosdam alios eis adhærentes virtute cujusdam statuti, cujus Procuratores sunt executores speciales, ut patet in eodem, erronee intellecti, a dicta congregatione nitebatur expellere; unde dicti, secundum consilium peritorum eis et causæ et communitati, ut prætendebant, specialiter affectorum, non coacti sed ad cautelam, ordinationi congregationis Regentium se submiserunt ut dictum monachum ab ejus proposito captiose[1] concepto facilius impedirent, protestatione tamen prius facta coram notario, prout inferius est expressum: Et interim alter Procurator ad consilium Regentium, in auxilium Abbatum, Londonium se transtulit, quod quidem consilium, de præsumptionibus dicti monachi et suorum fautorum per dictos Abbates et Procuratorem plenius informatum, ipsum ab ejus proposito, non obstante quod Archiepiscopus Cantuariensis sibi assistebat, totaliter impedivit. Ad instantiam tamen Cantuariensis Archiepiscopi et aliorum dominorum, ab Abbate erat obtentum quod dictus monachus posset more solito alias incipere per seipsum, quod et postea factum est: prædictus vero monachus omnes Regentes Artium in inceptione sua vestivit robis, dicto Procuratore duntaxat excepto, quamobrem dictæ Universitatis seniores, et honoris ejusdem præcipui zelatores, præfatum Procuratorem adversus monachum supradictum iterum excitabant, dicentes quod per illius robæ detentionem[2] præjudicium Procuratorum gravaretur officio, eo quod, secundum statuta et consuetudines, Procuratores propter eorum laborem debeant in talibus Magistris aliis præferri; quare dictus Procurator, cum consensu socii sui et seniorum de villa, dictum monachum ab inceptione sua iterum impedire disposuit; sed dictus monachus coram Cancellario antedicto, et Magistro Ludovico Cherletone in sacra pagina licentiato, et Ricardo Tyn-tion of one of the statutes, they contrived to do, whereupon the Proctors and their party submitted, upon advice of their counsel, but only under a protest and not of necessity, and one of the Proctors proceeded to London to attend the council of Regents sitting there, and this council succeeded in preventing the aforesaid monk from incepting as he wished, though he was abetted by the archbishop of Canterbury.

And when he did incept, which he did in the usual way, he presented all the Regents with robes, except the Proctor who opposed him by going to London.

Upon this the Proctor, assisted by his friends, endeavoured again to hinder his inception, but the monk appeared before the Chancellor and others, and, laying his hand upon his breast, swore that he did not biry doctore juris civilis et notario, Magistro Ricardo Toulworth et altero Procuratore supradicto, posita manu ad pectus, juravit in verbo, quod dictam robam non subtraxit animo vindicandi aut ex malitia, sed potius ex impotentia rationabiliter alleganda, allegans etiam coram eisdem qualiter famulus suus cum una roba, dictum Procuratorem, tempore illo quo dictus Procurator erat Londiniis, scientibus sociis suis, ad cameram suam sæpius inquisivit et circa, post dictam robam uni alteri tribuerat, quando dictus Procurator citra inceptionem suam ad villam accedere disparavit. Quibus auditis dictus Procurator gratanter et ex corde universum debitum dimisit eidem. Acta sunt hæc anno supradicto.

Note as to the conflicts between the University and the Town.

The great battle between the University and the town lasted four days, and the town was victorious, and there was in consequence a total cessation of all studies and an interdict was laid upon Oxford and the neighbouring towns.

[1]Memorandum est quod, istius anni quinto Idus Februarii, Diabolo satore scandali procurante, commissum fuit bellum inter Clericos Universitatis et laicos, et per quatuor dies naturales continuatum, in quo plures ex utraque parte mortui, et ubi prævaluerunt finaliter laici, et multa enormia contra pietatem et ecclesiasticas libertates hostiliter commissa sunt, propter quod immediate cessavit Universitas ab omni actu scholastico, et impositum est interdictum in civitate

[1] This Memorandum, itself of uncertain date, is plainly out of place where it occurs in the MS. I have, however, preferred to keep it as it there stands; the true date of the conflict alluded to is 1357, and on the margin of B. is written, apparently in A. Wood's handwriting:—"Sed omnino peccat hæc nota quoad "tempus lati interdicti ejusdemque "continuationis et relaxationis," vide inferius, p. 5, 2. On referring to which place we find the relaxation of the interdict, &c., which the reader will find in a previous part of this vol., p. 190.—Ed.

Beneath the Memorandum, which is in a later hand, is written in the same hand:—"Extracta ex antiquo "registro, in quo alia multa videri "licet gesta non sine lacrimis le-"genda."

The statute is as follows,—

Statutum Universitatis, cujus originale inventum est in nova cista librorum Universitatis, de libris legatis et in solario supra domum congregationis catenandis.[2]

Quia de libris Universitati Oxoniæ legatis per dominum Thomam de Cobham[3] bonæ memoriæ Vygornensem Episcopum, ad usum communem Scholarium in eisdem libris studere volentium, juxta tamen formam et modum taxatos per eundem, et, deficiente pecunia legata per eundem ad usum antedictum, dicta forma non poterat adimpleri; proinde, ex unanimi consensu tam Regentium quam Non-regentium, statutum est, quod libri, legati per eundem Thomam dictæ Universitati, ponantur in solario ad hoc specialiter per ipsum deputato, super cellario,[4] in quo Regentes communiter congregantur, catenandi, ordine competenti, ut in eisdem Scholares proficere volentes dictam domum ad dictos libros ingressum habeant liberum et egressum temporibus opportunis, sic tamen quod quidam libri eorumdem, qui majoris pretii æstimantur, vendantur, ad summam quadraginta librarum, aut amplius si oportuerit, nisi aliunde fiat remedium per dominos vel Scholares, unde emantur annui redditus sexaginta solidorum, pro uno Capellano,[5] qui pro anima dicti domini aliisque benefactoribus vivis ac defunctis Universitatis prædictæ celebret, temporibus perpetuo duraturis, dictisque libris custodiendis intendere teneatur, idemque

The books bequeathed to the University by Thos. Cobham shall be placed in the chamber over the congregation-house, and there chained in convenient order, so that Scholars, who wish to read therein, may have free access to them at proper times;

Some of them however, of greater value, shall be sold, to the amount of forty pounds, for the purpose of providing an annual income of sixty shillings, to be paid to a Chaplain, who shall have the custody of these and all other books heretofore given, or here-

Oxoniensis, Lincolniensis diœcesis, salutem et apostolicam benedictionem.

Indesinentis curæ, velut[1] totius Dominici gregis pastor, sollicitudine[2] premimur, et assiduæ cogitationis excitamur instantia, ut[3] studia literarum et studentes ibidem prospere et salubriter dirigantur ac a gravaminibus releventur, et ad id, quantum cum Deo possumus, partes nostræ sollicitudinis adhibemus. I have been informed that great inconvenience, and danger to the peace of the University is occasioned by the necessity, at present existing, of obtaining the confirmation of the Chancellor of Oxford by the bishop of Lincoln, because the deputation sent for that purpose are often obliged to follow the said bishop into distant parts, and in the meantime there is no one to keep the turbulent in order; wherefore, moved thereto by your prayers, I hereby ordain that henceforth the election of a Chancellor by the University shall be sufficient, and the person so elected shall not need the confirmation of the diocesan.

STATUTES FOR THE REGULATION AND SPEEDY TERMINATION OF APPEALS.

Statuta edita in festo S. Luceæ, existente tunc Cancellario Magistro Wilhelmo Courtenay, Procuratoribus Magistris Roberto Alesham et Wilhelmo Eferby,[1] anno Domini millesimo treecntesimo sexagesimo octavo.

A.D. 1368.

Notwithstanding it has been provided by statute that causes and appeals shall be determined within certain limits specified, frivolous appeals are still protracted, from the lack of judges to decide them in the long vacation, it is therefore enacted, that for the futuro the Proctors may appoint judges to sit during vacation as well as during term.

Cum in statuto caveatur quod omnes et singulæ causæ principales infra triduum deberent terminari, et causæ appellationum in primo festo sequenti, nihilominus quamplures frustratorie appellant, eo quod judices, ut communiter asseritur, in magna vacatione assignari non possunt, unde in detrimentum studentium causæ[2] quamplures ultra modum frequentius protelantur, idcireo statuit Universitas, quod in omni vacatione, sicut in pleno termino, convocatis convocandis, judices assignentur per Procuratores, qui sedere teneantur, ut extra vacationem hactenus est consuetum.

If so many of these are challenged by the suitors as not to leave sufficient to hear the causes, the Proctors shall appoint from the least objectionable of those challenged.

Item, statutum est, quod si per[3] partem appellantem vel appellatam tanta multitudo judicum per Procuratores assignatorum recusata fuerit, quod residui non-recusati non sufficiant pro judicibus assignandis, eligant tunc partes de recusatis minus suspectis, quod si noluerint vel dicant omnes æqualiter suspectas,[4] deputent tunc Procuratores de minus suspectis, et eorum deputatione finaliter stetur.

Item, statutum est, quod cum deputatorum aliquis fuerit absens, quod Cancellarius cum altero Procuratorum possit assumere in loco cujuscumque absentis unum alium, secundum quod Cancellario et alteri Procuratorum, in casu quo alius Procurator dissenserit, requisitum[1] videbitur pro omnibus ordinandis, in omnibus quæ concernunt causam appellationis et inhibitionis perpetratæ.

Item, ad majorem studentium tranquillitatem ex unanimi consensu Regentium et Non-regentium ordinatum est, quod quilibet appellans, in causa civili aut spirituali terminabili infra Universitatem, ab altero judice ejusdem, absque saltu, secundum hunc appellet ordinem, ut, si causa primo tractetur coram judice hebdomadario seu officiali domini Cancellarii, et pars altera sentiat[3] se gravatum, appellet, si velit, immediate ad dominum Cancellarium, et non ad alium judicem proximo : et tunc, si secundo aggravatum se sentiat, appellet immediate ad congregationem Regentium et non ad alium judicem proximo, a qua, si velit, sensato gravamine, immediate appellet ad Universitatem Regentium et Non-regentium, et non ad alium judicem proximo, sub pœna excommunicationis, incarcerationis, bannitionis, suspensionis ab omni actu scholastico, degradationis, et injurii reatus promulgationis cuilibet contravenienti non immerito inferenda; ita quod continue appellatio valida fiat ab inferiori judice ipsius Universitatis ad sibi proximo superiorem, nulla causa ad intra terminabili, pœnis sub prædictis,[4] exterius appellata, et

All appeals, in causes temporal or spiritual, terminable within the University, shall be conducted as follows,—from any of the Chancellor's deputies the first appeal shall be to the Chancellor himself; from the Chancellor's decision the next appeal shall be to the congregation of regent Masters; and, from their decision, to the whole University of regent and non-regent Masters; and no one shall reverse this order, under pain of excommunication, imprisonment, banishment, suspension from degrees, &c.

From the decision of the whole University of regent and non-regent Masters, there may be an appeal to the King in civil, and to the Pope in spiritual causes.

Item, ut ordo judicum pertinentium Universitati, secundum sub et super, certius cognoscatur, statuit Universitas et decrevit, quod super hebdomadarium [2] officialem proximus sit Cancellarius vel ejus Commissarius generalis, et immediate super eundem sit congregatio Regentium, et proximo supra eam sit Universitas [3] Regentium et Non-regentium,[4] et immediate supra ipsam, in causa civili, dominus noster rex, sed in causa spirituali duntaxat dominus noster Papa sanctissimus. Et sint duo Procuratores assessores in singulis causis tractatis in Universitate ipsi Cancellario, et unus judex ad inhibendum in causa appellationis et in omnibus actibus solemnibus Universitatis; ad cujus ordinis et seriei observantiam [5] tenetur, sub pœna perjurii, graduatus quilibet in hac Universitate, et cuilibet adversanti toto virium conatu resistere.

And all graduates shall be bound to observe this order, and to resist all who endeavour to reverse it.

A.D. 1407.

Ad honorem Domini, et almæ Universitatis Oxoniæ honestatem præcipuam et decorem, recolendæ memoriæ Magister Ricardus Flemmyng, Canonicus ecclesiæ cathedralis Eboracensis, et Procurator borealis Universitatis antedictæ, anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo septimo, hunc librum statuta et privilegia Universitatis Master Richard Fleming, Northern Proctor, caused this book to be written at his own expense and presented it to his successors for ever.

[1] As the Junior Proctor's book is the only one of the several MSS. which has any introduction, and as the order of the statutes &c. herein specified is not observed in the other MSS., it has been thought better to place this introduction in its chronological place with the other documents, instead of placing it at the commencement of the volume, where it would have been no guide to the contents.—Ed.

integraliter continentem propriis sumptibus fieri fecit, et sub forma, quæ liquet, parari, eandemque in sui resignatione officii Universitati libere contulit successoribus suis Procuratoribus ex parte boreali, qui pro tempore fuerint, pro perpetuo spectaturum.

In this book are written, first, the Calendar, &c., then the history of the removal of the University, then the oath to observe the statutes thereof, &c., then the forms for the several faculties, beginning with that of Theology, after which follows that of Decrees, then that of Civil Law, then that of Medicine.

In hoc siquidem libro forma et ordo hujusmodi observantur: præmittitur imprimis kalendarium more consueto Universitatis descriptum, post quod Evangelia, fundatio et translatio Universitatis, juramentum principale ad observandum statuta, privilegia, consuetudines, et libertates ejusdem non incongrue subjunguntur. Proceditur post hæc ad singularum facultatum statuta et formas, et incipitur in hoc libro ab illa scientiarum regina sacratissima theologica facultate, quæ prima fuit in intentione condentis, et inter cæteras facultates prærogativa præeminet ampliori; cujus quidem excellentiæ famulatrix et ancilla, veneranda decretorum facultas, non inconsone est subjuncta, eidemque, propter formarum et graduum connexionem præcipuam, juris civilis formam annectit consonus iste ordo; et, ut venerabilis medicinæ facultas eximiæ artium quoad formas . . .[1] sine medio aliquo divisionis est socia, igitur earumdem formæ in hoc libro immediatius sunt conscriptæ, præposita tamen forma, ut contingit de medicinæ facultate.[2]

[Then that of Arts.]

After these Vesperies are treated of, then the mode of inception, then follow the statutes relating to grammar. Then, resumption and cessation of lectures, masses, processions, and the like.

Post hæc de vesperiis, et inde de modo incipiendi facultates singulas concernentibus convenienter agitur. Modus docendi ac proficiendi in grammatica subjungitur. De modo cessandi et resumendi lectiones ordinarias, cum missis et processionibus congruentibus, tractat proximo hic processus.

[1] A word lost.

[2] Three lines here are most effectually destroyed, erasure has not been deemed sufficient, and recourse has been had to destroying a portion of the vellum.

Demum ad electiones et cessationes, ac modum regiminis Cancellarii, Procuratorum, et Bedellorum progreditur, statuta et ordinationes de cistis singulis subscribuntur; post quæ de concordiis et processibus variis inter Universitatem et communitatem villæ factis mentio fit condigna. Privilegia siquidem et libertates amplissimæ, quæ felicis recordationis Romani Pontifices et illustris memoriæ Anglorum reges almæ Universitati Oxoniensi elapsis annorum decursibus contulerunt, in hujus libelli serie post memoratas materias tenore [1] plenario inseruntur, ut robur, munimen, firmitas, et conclusio omnium præmissorum. Alia tamen statuta specialia, necnon et speciales statutorum materiæ, quæ in variis varie, ut constat, emergunt, quia hic seriosius ea explicare non convenit, volenti inquirere evidebunt ad promptum in satis apta tabula superius annotata.

Then follow the forms of election, &c. of the Chancellor, Proctors, and Bedels, the ordinances for the several chests, then the agreements between the University and the Town, then the privileges, &c. granted to the University by Popes and Kings;—and sundry statutes made from time to time will also be found in this volume.

A.D. circ. 1408–9?

Cum determinatorum numerus in facultate artium usque adeo crescat nonnunquam, quod, præoccupatis ab eorum aliquibus publicis amplis decentibus et honestis Magistrorum scholis, alii in profanis et vilibus laicorum officinis, extra "vicum scholarum," ac etiam infra, in quibusdam aularum cellulis et secretis penetralibus, ab accessu Scholarium longe positis, determinare arctantur, ubi, tum pro graduatorum replicantium paucitate, tum pro ignoto locorum situ et vilitate, soli cum responsa-

Sometimes the number of determining Bachelors is so great that the schools of the Masters are all occupied, and the Bachelors determine elsewhere in private houses and rooms, where there is no possibility of a proper attendance,

[1] The remainder, about three lines, is now past recovery in the MS., but a later hand, (that, probably, of G. Langbaine,) has supplied it, and from his transcript the above is copied: the tabula alluded to is not in existence.

[2] The date of this statute can only be conjectured. The date of the statute immediately preceding is 1408; this, however, alone would be almost no guide, but as the statute does not occur in A. or C., of which C., the more recent, was written in the year 1407, it becomes probable that 1408 or 1409, is the true date, or nearly so.

so that the faculty of Arts is dishonoured, and learning brought into disrepute; therefore it is hereby enacted that, Bachelors must henceforth determine only in the thirty-two schools situated in "School Street."

Ex alia parte ascendendo[1] per Aulam Vitream, Stapulinam, et parvam Aulam Nigram, quibus liceat addere scholam parvam in angulo dictæ Aulæ Universitatis situatam: quod si numerus determinatorum excedat numerum vicenarium, et citra numerum triginta trium, tunc, secundum arbitrium Cancellarii et Procuratorum, dividantur in duas partes æquales, æquali portione, seu viciniori (sic) qua possunt.: si vero prædictus numerus non excedat vicenarium, tunc omnes determinent simul; proviso quod, sive facta divisione, sive non, quælibet portio determinatorum ad minus habeat septem dies integros, si possibile fuerit, sine suscitatione aliqua, diebus primi introitus et extremi exitus minime computatis: in residuis vero diebus, et sive dividantur, sive non, Cancellario et Procuratoribus liceat, si eis expediens visum fuerit, propria duntaxat auctoritate suscitare et non nomine alicujus Sancti, patriæ, vel personæ privatæ, ita quod intrent scholas suis diebus ante prandium, ad pulsationem parvæ campanæ in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ immediate post horam nonam, et exeant ad pulsationem ejusdem campanæ immediate post horam duodecimam: ac etiam intrantes post prandium statim post horam primam, ad pulsationem prædictæ campanæ, exire teneantur immediate post horam quintam, ad pulsationem ejusdem

If the number of determiners be more than twenty and under thirty-two, they shall be divided into two equal parts; if they do not exceed twenty, they shall all determine at once, and, whether they be divided or not, their determination shall last seven entire days.

It is desirable that a certain form should be drawn up for the admission of determining Bachelors, and especially in the faculty of Arts, wherein the logical acumen of her sons has shed so great lustre upon the University.

Quia per solemnes determinationes Bachillariorum in facultate artium nostra mater Oxoniæ Universitas, et præcipue ipsa artium facultas, multipliciter honoratur, ac mira scientiæ logicalis subtilitas, qua præfata mater nostra supra cætera mundi studia dignoscitur hactenus claruisse, per fructuosum exercitium in eisdem potissimum suscipit incrementum, utile et expediens, visum est Magistris ut certa forma provideretur, sub qua Bachillarii sufficientes et idonei, exclusis indignis, ad determinationis actum forent admittendi, modumque et conditiones exprimere, quos in suo introitu, processu et exitu debeant observare: necnon formam sic statutam, ne temporis vetustate ipsam deleret oblivio, scripturæ perpetuæ mancipare. Provisa est igitur quædam ordinatio a Cancellario, Procuratoribus, et ab octo Magistris per congregationem Regentium et Non-regentium ad hoc specialiter deputatis, in forma subscripta: videlicet, quod singulis annis per octo dies ante "Diem cinerum," in congregatione Magistrorum regentium, quatuor Regentes in artibus, scilicet duo[2] Australes et duo Borcales, a Procuratoribus assignentur, qui, per fidem qua Deo tenentur et Universitati, in præsentia

Wherefore the following ordinance is issued by the Chancellor, the Proctors, and eight Masters chosen for this duty.

Four Regents in Arts, two North-country-men, and two South-country-men shall be chosen

[1] Forma determinatorum, is the title in A. and C. This and the following statutes are all in the same handwriting in A., and that not the writing in which the older part of the MS. is written, so that it is most likely that they are all of the same date, and a marginal note in the MS., by a later hand, observes: anno, ut videtur, 1408° edita sunt hæc statuta, vide infra fol. 89, referring to the date at the end of this set of statutes, see p. 248 of this volume.

in congregation every year eight days before Ash-Wednesday, for the office of admitting determining Bachelors.

They shall make oath that they will not admit any unfit candidate; and the admissions shall be completed by Ash-Wednesday.

The Bachelors who offer themselves for admission shall appear before these Masters with the testimony of their own Masters in their favour, and shall make oath that they have passed through the necessary previous forms and studies.

Magistrorum promittent, quod nullum indignum ad determinandum secundum formam provisam admittent. Qui etiam, die Sabbati proxima præcedente "Diem Cinerum" vel [ante, ad][1] admittendos determinaturos, tam pro se quam pro aliis, procedant, et infra triduum omnino perficiant; coram quibus Magistris, cum laudabili Magistrorum vel Bachillariorum testimonio, conveniant Bachillarii singuli eodem anno determinaturi; præsentati[2] vero ad determinandum pro se jurent, se de quæstione infra octo dies a tempore resumptionis post Natale Domini vel antea respondisse, et per quatuor annos ante festum S.[3] Michaelis præteritum in scholis, ubi viget studium generale, faeultatem artium audivisse; jurabunt etiam quod ante responsionem suam ad quæstionem ad minus per annum Sophistæ[4] fuerant generales, Parvisum[5] interim frequentantes, et se ibidem disputando, arguendo, et respondendo doctrinaliter exercentes.

The studies specified: Logic.

Jurabunt insuper singuli pro se determinaturi quatuor libros logicales, videlicet, Porphyrii "prædicatorum," "Sex principiorum"[6] et "elenchorum," et "barbarismum" Donati, secundum sufficientem expositionem a Magistro vel Bachillario in collegio aut in aula se lectionatim integre audivisse eum recitatione debite subsecuta, ita tamen quod in primo biennio,[7] quo Scholares fuerint faeultatis artium, hujusmodi auditionem lectionariam, ut præfertur, aggredi non præsumant, et, eum dictorum librorum auditionem incepperint, per majorem partem anni ad minus moram faciant in eadem.

Item, teneantur singuli pro se determinaturi omnes libros logicæ tam veteris quam novæ, præter quartum librum "Topicorum" Boëthii, quem audivisse non astringantur, una cum Prisciani[3] "de constructionibus" et "Barbarismo" Donati semel in scholis publice a Bachillariis cursorie legentibus audire pacifice et attente.

De Determinaturis pro aliis.

Those who determine for others shall be required to have read at lecture in college or hall an additional book of Aristotle.

Determinaturus autem pro aliis, si prius pro se non[4] determinaverit, et pro aliis determinare voluerit, præter formam determinaturis pro se indictam, quam anno præcedente ante determinatorum admissionem se juret omnino complesse,[5] librum "Posteriorum"[6] Aristotelis, cum sufficienti ipsius declaratione, in collegio vel aula, a Magistro vel Bachillario lectionatim cum recitatione debita audisse se noscat arctatum.

Quilibet autem pro aliis determinaturus, qui prius pro se non determinaverit, ingredi die Lunæ, vel Martis ad ultimum, post medium Quadragesimæ teneatur, prout fuerat antiquitus consuetum.

Those who determine for others must enter the schools on the Monday or Tuesday after Mid-Lent at the latest.

Insuper statutum est, quod omnes qui voluerint determinare, si ante prandium intraverint, statim ingrediantur scholas ad pulsationem campanæ in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ, post pulsationem ad horam nonam,[1] et exeant quum pulsabitur immediate post prandium apud S. Frideswydam. Si vero post prandium intraverint, statim ingrediantur scholas quum pulsabitur immediate post prandium apud S. Frideswydam, et tunc incipiant disputare, ita quod disputatio totaliter finiatur in pulsatione completorii S. Frideswydæ, ut tunc Scholares possint audire cursus suos, sicut hactenus[2] fieri consuevit. Et istud statutum quoad utramque sui partem, videlicet, quoad disputationis inceptionem, et determinationis completionem, ita stricte[3] observetur quod sine Cancellarii et singulorum Regentium consensu nulla super hoc dispensatio concedatur.

Item, ordinatum est, quod nullus determinator[4] determinet in aliqua ecclesia, vel alibi quam in scholis Magistri sui, vel saltem in scholis alicujus Magistri artium. Determiners shall dispute logic every day, except on Fridays, when they must dispute grammar; and on the first and last days of their determination, when they must dispute "questions."

Item, statutum est, quod teneatur[1] determinaturus quilibet omni die, quo disputaturus intrabit, logicalia tantummodo disputare cum pertinentibus argumentis quantumcunque potest, præterquam diebus Veneris, in quibus disputet grammaticalia duntaxat, et præterquam diebus primo et ultimo, in quibus disputet quæstiones. Teneatur etiam determinator quilibet Magistro suo[2] præsenti parere in iis quæ Magistro per Universitatem provide sunt commissa, quoad correptionem seu correctionem non-disputantium logicalia vel disputantium cum impertinentibus argumentis ad materiam, sophisticis, vel problematis disputatis.[3] Teneatur etiam Magister præsens proprius, et in absentia sua Magister senior qui interfuerit, corripere aliter disputantes quam superius est expressum, et Cancellario infra biduum denunciare rebelles, qui corrigat delinquentem et puniat, assidentibus Procuratoribus, et Magistro accusante præsente, prout rationabile viderit, juxta quantitatem delicti.

Every determiner must obey his Master, who is to correct and stop him if he disputes on other things than logic, or if he uses arguments which are irrelevant or sophistical, &c.

And the Master shall be bound to send the names of the disobedient to the Chancellor, who with the Proctors shall punish them.

The admitting Masters shall only admit those who are fit as to learning and morals; and if any question arise as to their fitness in other respects, as age, stature, &c., it shall be settled by the opinion of a majority of the Regents of the University.

Item, Magistri eorum,[4] prout moris est, ad determinatores admittendum[5] de cætero[6] eligendi, admittant in scientia et moribus idoneos, ut tenentur: si vero de aliis quam de moribus vel scientia, utpote de ætate, statura, aut cæteris corporum circumstantiis, dubium quid emergat, majoris partis Universitatis Regentium[7] arbitrio reservetur.

A. 89. B. 40.

Item, revocata sunt statuta,[2] quandocunque prius edita, quibus arctabantur determinatores ne robas, aut quid aliud prætextu suæ determinationis, conferrent Magistris vel aliis quantumcunque pauperibus, et quibus etiam arctabantur Magistri, ne quid reciperent præter tertiam partem pensionis scholarum; revocatis etiam statutis, quibus arctabantur determinatores, ne festa facerent aut potationes, quibus etiam astricti fuerant quæstionistæ, sub pœna inhabilitatis ad ulteriorem gradum in Universitate, ne ipsi facerent festa vel potationes, cum responderint ad quæstionem, quantumcunque divites fuerint vel potentes, habiles reddebantur omnes, de communi consensu Regentium et Non-regentium, quotquot prius inhabiles effecti fuerant virtute statutorum hujusmodi vel statuti.

A.D. 1408.

The statutes which forbade determiners to give robes, &c. to Masters or other needy persons, and which prohibited the acceptance of such gifts, are repealed; and likewise those statutes which prohibited the feastings and convivial meetings of determiners and questionists; and all who were deprived of privileges by the operation of such statutes are hereby relieved from their disabilities.

Statutum est etiam, propter eandem causam, propter quam et de inceptoribus est statutum, ne ipsi indifferenter robas cum palliis conferant qualitercunque promotis, quod nullus determinator vel quæstionista de secta sua conferat promoto ad viginti marcas, vel ad majorem summam juxta taxationem in subsidium Terræ Sanctæ, nisi ita fuerit quod ille, cui conferre disposuerit, ad tantam vel ad majorem summam promotus, Magister ejus fuerit vel curator, aut alius in sanguine sibi propinquus fuerit vel affinis.

Neither determiners nor questionists shall give robes to Masters who possess a benefice of the value of twenty marks a year, unless such Master be their own Master, or in some way related to them.

The form to be observed by the Proctors in the asking and granting of graces.[2]

There have been various opinions as to the form to be observed by the Proctors in asking and granting of graces; but they are merely opinions, and grounded on no reasons: to put an end to these disputes, it is hereby declared, that the Proctor, who pronounces a grace granted, must first say the form "Gratia petita est ista," &c., and then read the grace which is sought at full length to the Masters present, and the other Proctor must sit by him before he reads the grace.

Cum variæ hactenus inter Regentes, super forma pronunciationis gratiarum, opiniones fuerunt et sententiæ, opinantibus quibusdam alterum Procuratorem sedentem pronunciare posse gratiam, altero non sedente, asserentibus quod satis foret[3] gratiæ si per Procuratorem alterum pronunciata fuerit gratia pro concessa, et si per alterum fuerit recitata, nec[4] fore necessarium gratiam ante pronunciationem ab eo recitari, qui eam pronunciare debeat de consuetudine statutorum; verum quia talibus opinionibus innitentes opiniones suas argumentis seu rationibus non affirmant, solum pro opinionis suæ robore se sic vidisse factum[5] allegantes, congregatio solemnis Regentium, volens altercationes hujusmodi finaliter terminare, sententialiter declaravit, et declarando decrevit, quod abhinc Procurator quilibet, qui gratiam pronunciare debeat de consuetudine vel statuto, etiam debeat ante pronunciationem sub hac forma personaliter recitare: "Gratia petita est ista," etc., et sic gratiam petitam, ante sui pronunciationem, de verbo ad verbum

Gratia autem futuris abhinc temporibus, quæ contra hanc formam in aliquo pronunciata fuerit pro concessa, sit ipso facto nulla, ac in eadem congregatione per Cancellarium vel[1] ejus Commissarium tunc præsentem sententialiter adnullanda. Præterea, pro dictæ ordinationis observantia pleniori, congregatio solemniter ordinavit, quod dicta ordinatio annis singulis per Procuratores, qui pro tempore fuerint, infra mensem post festum S. Dionysii in congregatione Regentium solemni ad sui renovationem solemniter perlegatur; quod si per Procuratorum negligentias oblivionis incuriæ committatur, firmi tamen sit roboris, ac si de anno in annum solemniter renovetur.

For the future no grace shall be valid in the granting of which this form has not been observed.

All guardians of chests, who have held their office longer than the time prescribed in the old statutes, shall, within a month after Easter next ensuing, deliver such chests to certain Masters appointed to receive the same, under pain of forfeiting forty shillings; and, for the future, all guardians of chests shall be obliged to deliver up the chests at the time ordered in the old statutes: and the Chancellor shall be bound, under a penalty of forty shillings, to levy the fines for violation of these statutes.

[4] There is no doubt that the true date of this statute is assigned in the margin. All this set of statutes, beginning at p. 250, with that "of the celebration of various masses for benefactors," occur together in A. in a peculiar handwriting, quite different from that in which the main part of the MS. is written. A second statute, however, for "the chest of five keys," was made in the year 1426, which hardly differs from this one, except that several additions were then made. Both copies of the statute are in A.; the latter will be found in its chronological place in this volume.

Anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo duodecimo, mensis Novembris die vicesimo, in congregatione solemni Regentium et Non-regentium celebrata, existente Cancellario Magistro Ricardo Courtenay, Procuratoribus vero Magistro Gilberto Kymer, Magistro Wilhelmo Symonde, edita fuerunt statuta sequentia, concurrente consensu facultatum Theologiæ, Juris Canonici, Civilis, et Artium.[3]

Cum, Deo duce, sit inesse fieri[4] (sic) Universitatis nostræ libraria communis, cujus custodia negligens plurima libris inibi successu temporis causaret incommoda, et per consequens boni publici publica subinduceret detrimenta, Universitas statuit et decrevit, quod Capellanus idoneus, in sacerdotio constitutus, in custodiam librariæ communis in congregatione Regentium solemni eligatur, sub modo et forma quibus eliguntur

Since, by the blessing of God, there has come to be a library in the University, the careless management of which would cause great evils, the University ordained that a Chaplain in holy orders should be elected in congregation to have charge thereof.

[1] Possibly, though not probably, the form drawn up in accordance with this order may be that which will be found under the conjectural date 1408–9, p. 241 supra. It has been thought better, however, to leave the statutes there printed in that place, because it is impossible to identify any one of them with the form here mentioned, and, placed as they are, they form a complete set of statutes on the subject, while the difference of date between 1408 and 1412 is too inconsiderable to cause any difficulty in referring to them.

[4] Such is the undoubted reading in all the MSS.

He shall be bound by his oath to deliver up to the Chancellor and Proctors in congregation the keys of the library every year on the day when the Bedels surrender their maces; and, if he be deemed fit in morals, fidelity and ability, the keys shall be again handed to him, if otherwise, another Chaplain shall be appointed in his stead.

Benefactors to the Library.[3]

The principal benefactors to the library, whose names are here written, shall be remembered specially at the masses; they are King Henry IV.; Henry, Prince of Wales; and his brothers Thomas, John, and Humfrey; Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury: Philip Repyntone, Bishop of Lincoln; Edmund, Earl of March; and Master Richard Courtenay.

Item, quia variæ variorum statuum sunt personæ, quorum gratiis, laboribus, et favore est libraria hujusmodi ad incrementum studii feliciter consummata,[4] Universitas nominavit personas certas, quæ magis eorum judicio sunt meritæ, quarum nomina in perpetuum, virtute statuti, et sub pœna perjurii, habebit Capellanus, qui pro tempore fuerit, in missis suis singulis et in memoria commendatos specifice speciali; quorum sequuntur[5] nomina, et sunt hæc: illustrissimus princeps Henricus quartus, Rex Angliæ et Franciæ; serenissimus princeps Henricus Princeps Walliæ, primogenitus suus; illustres sibi fratres Thomas, Johannes, et Humfridus; Thomas Arundelle, Cantuariensis Episcopus; Philippus Repyntone, Lincolniensis Episcopus; Edmundus Comes Marchiæ; et Magister Ricardus Courtenay.

Item, quia congruentia quadam publicam induceret honestatem publicum clcri ministrum pro cleri benefactoribus in publico exorare, et præcipue loco tali ubi consucvcrunt Universitatis actus publici magis consuetudinarie celebrari, Universitas statuit et decrevit, quod Capellani eligendi in perpetuum in ecclesia Beatæ Virginis ad altarc S. Katerinæ juxta ostium domus congregationis, vel alibi ad assignationcm Cancellarii, infra cœmeterium[2] ecclesiæ Beatæ Virginis celebrabunt missas suas, cxceptis diebus in quibus Universitatis missas in locis eos oporteat solitis celebrare.

Since it is fit that the public minister of the clergy should offer public prayers for the clergy, and especially in that place where the public acts of the University take place, therefore the Chaplain shall celebrate the said masses at the altar of S. Katherine in S. Mary's church, or else at some place within the cemetery of that church, except such masses as by ancient custom have a special place for their celebration.

Item, ne benefactorum nostrorum memoriam a cogitatu nostro negligenter evellat memoriæ noverca oblivio, Universitas statuit et decrevit, quod custos eligendus proximo unam grandem et notabilem tabulam faciet in libraria communi in perpetuum suspendendam, in qua eleganti et pulchra manu inscribi faciet omnes et singulos libros in libraria successu[3] temporis continendos, una cum nominibus conferentium et numero contentorum; omni nocte libros apertos,[4] fenestras apertas, et ostium librariæ infallibiliter recludendo.

A large and conspicuous board shall be suspended in the library, on which shall be inscribed in fair writing the names of all books in the library, with the names of the donors.

The books, and the windows and doors of the library shall be closed every night.

Item, cum, canone testc, cujus donum frequcntius inspicitur,[5] ejus memoria distinctius retinetur, Universitas statuit et decrevit, quod, cum aliquem seu aliquos Universitati libros donari contingat, infra triduum a donationis tempore, congregationi Regentium, seu convocationi Regentium et Non-regentium præsentcntur,

[1] These few words do not form a portion of the actual statute, but they are written after it in a different, but nearly contemporary hand. The statute itself apparently ought not to end here, for a few folios further on in C. occur the aforesaid condemned articles at full length, without any preface or remark: they are not given here, as being already accessible elsewhere. It is worthy of remark, however, that at the end of certain statutes of the University, known by the title of "Statuta nova," made in the year 1564–5, and which are preserved at the end of B., the following words occur:—Statuta illa, quæ de Wickliffo sancita sunt, et contra quasdam Russelli conclusiones ferebantur, volumus ut in posterum neque legantur, neque inter statuta annumerentur; probably these words refer to some statutes of the University made in Wielif's lifetime, and which originally occupied the lost folios of C., which preceded the condemned articles.

A. 35. THE PARTICULARS OF CERTAIN GRACES, &C. GRANTED IN CONGREGATION.[1]

[1] No title in MS.

[2] Whether the word tres is a mistake of the copyist for quatuor, or whether some other solution of the difficulty is to be suggested, it is not easy to determine, certainly only three Articuli are specified in the statute following, but after them

Primus Articulus.

The first grace; —that some remedy may be devised for the removal of pledges and written bonds from the chests.

Ut memoria benefactorum Universitatis, qui ad pauperum relevamen studentium in eadem pro mutuandis pecuniis cistas fundaverant, crebrior habeatur, placeat huic venerabili congregationi Regentium et Non-regentium pro extrahendis ab eisdem suis cautionibus et ejusdem obligatoriis literis ordinare remedium, ne, præfatis benefactoribus dictorum pauperum orationibus defraudatis, Universitas videatur ultimis voluntatibus contraire.

Secundus Articulus.

The second grace related to the six persons mentioned in the following two graces.

Secundo quidem proponebatur articulus gratiosus, modificatus tamen ad sex personas tantum in subscriptis gratiis expressatas.

Tertius Articulus.

The third grace; —that congregation would determine what must be done with the pledges deposited before the first pestilence.

Placeat huic venerabili congregationi, etc., providere quid agendum sit cum cautionibus ante primam pestilentiam incistatis.

Pro quorum primum expeditione et remedio assectando,[1] concessæ sunt gratiæ quinque fratribus, videlicet, Thomæ Benham, de ordine Prædicatorum, et Thomæ Chayne, de ordine Minorum, Ricardo Franke, de ordine Augustinensium, Johanni Lauvale,[2] de ordine Carmelitarum, et Roberto Hyldreskelf, de ordine Prædicatorum, secundum formam in registris Cancellarii et Procuratorum planius expressatam.

comes the finalis gratia, which does not seem to be other than a fourth articulus. The whole document is very confused and difficult to understand; as to the reading of tres or quatuor the option must be left to the reader.

[1] assectato, MS.

[2] or Lanvale, MS.

A fourth grace;—

Finalis vero gratia erat pro honorabili et circumspecto viro, Magistro Thoma Rodebory, sub hac forma petita; that formal difficulties may be dispensed with as to the succession of Master Thomas Rodebory to the office of Chancellor.

Placeat huic venerabili congregationi Regentium et Non-regentium gratiosius dispensare, et cum omni effectu juris in hac parte concedere, quatenus, resignato officio Cancellariatus Universitatis Oxoniensis per honorabilem et discretum virum Magistrum Walterum Treugof, eo facto venerabilis vir Magister Thomas Rodebory, nunc pro tunc ad hoc vocatus, sit realiter Cancellarius Universitatis ejusdem.

This grace was granted.

Quæ quidem gratia per majorem partem Non-regentium, ac per facultates sacræ Theologiæ, Juris Canonici, Medicinæ, et Artium, tunc præsentem concessa, et per Cancellarium pro concessa pronunciata fuerat, ut est moris.

As to the third grace, it was ordered, that six or eight Masters should be appointed to dispose of the pledges therein mentioned.

Quoad tertium articulum ordinatum et statutum est, quod deputentur octo vel sex Magistri in congregatione Regentium, ad disponendum pro cautionibus ante[1] primam pestilentiam incistatis, secundum vim, formam et tenorem cujusdam statuti alias editi super eodem negotio, tempore prænobilis viri Ricardi Courtenay, ad tunc Cancellarii.

The last act of this congregation was to draw up a form of statute for the better future keeping of the jewels, &c., of the University, when they should have been released, and to provide that no one, without special leave of congregation, should pledge them hereafter.

Est insuper finalis ordinatio præfatæ congregationis Regentium et Non-regentium in formam statuti redacta, pro securiori custodia dictarum cautionum et jocalium, postquam extracta fuerunt, et aliorum bonorum Universitatis prædictæ, quæ nec Cancellarius, nec Procuratores, nec quisquam alius, qualiscunque conditionis fuerit, amodo impignorabit nec impignorari facict alioquin de rebus Universitatis, absque gratia speciali petita, concessa, et more solito pronunciata ad minus in congregatione Regentium.

Acta fuit hæc et expedita in dicta congregatione, die et anno supradictis, et in hanc formam redacta per Given under our privy seal at Westminster, the twenty-ninth day of March, in the eighth year of our reign.

1. For the future better preservation of the peace in the University, all Scholars and servants of Scholars, on first coming to Oxford, shall swear to observe the statutes enacted

In primis, pro paee servanda firmius, et riotis et malefieiis amodo, Deo duce, in Universitate Oxoniæ vitandis, appunctuatum et ordinatum existit, videlicet, ut quieunque Scholares et omnes Seholarium famuli diseretionis annos attingentes, infra mensem a tempore primi adductus sui ad Universitatem, coram Caneellario,

In congregatione magna Regentium et Non-regentium Universitatis Oxoniæ, vicesimo primo die mensis Januarii, anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo vicesimo sexto celebrata, existente tunc Cancellario Magistro Thoma Chace, Sacræ paginæ[2] Professore, Procuratoribus vero Magistris Thoma Lysurs et Johanne Arundell, edita fuerunt statuta sequentia ex consensu unanimi omnium facultatum.

For the safer custody of the property of the University, before Whitsunday next ensuing a chest with five keys shall be made; of which keys the Chancellor shall hold one; and of the remaining four two Regents in Arts, one a north- and the other a south-country-man, shall hold two, and two Non-regents, members of colleges, one a north- and the other a south-country-man, the other two.

Pro firmiori custodia bonorum Universitatis in futuris temporibus Universitas statuit et decrevit, quod intra festum Pentecostes proximum futurum fiat una nova cista cum quinque seris et quinque clavibus, quarum quinque clavium unam custodiat Cancellarius Universitatis qui pro tempore fuerit; et duo Regentes Artium eligendi ad illius cistæ custodiam, Australis et Borealis, custodiant etiam duas; duas autem alias claves habeant duo Magistri Artium non-regentes collegiati, Australis et Borealis, qui cistæ hujusmodi custodiam habeant a festo Pentecostes proximo futuro usque ad primam congregationem Regentium post electionem Procuratorum, in qua hi quatuor Magistri resignent officia suæ custodiæ, computum de per eos receptis et liberatis coram judicibus tunc eligendis, secundum formam inferius annotatam, infra mensem reddituri.

On the day of their resignation their successors shall be appointed, who may not be members of any religious order: their office shall be annual, and they shall deliver their account within one month after their resignation.

Eodem etiam[3] die, quo ipsi in congregatione Regentium solemni ad hoc celebranda officium hujusmodi resignant, in eadem congregatione per majorem partem Regentium eligantur eorum successores, duo Regentes et duo Non-regentes collegiati, Australes et Boreales, et personæ sæculares, quorum officium per annum solummodo duret, sub forma qua supra. Ita quod post annum teneantur eandem cistam liberare et de ea comptum reddere, quantum in ipsis est, sub pœna quadraginta solidorum per eorum quemlibet defectivum infra mensem eidem Universitati effectualiter solvendorum, cujus summæ levamen facere Cancellarius teneatur, et sic in perpetuum tam forma electionis quam computi fiat.

Those elected shall be bound to discharge the duties of the office under a penalty of forty shillings.

Electi vero ibidem et nominati onus et officium hujusmodi subire teneantur, sub pœna quadraginta solidorum eidem cistæ solvendorum, quam pœnam, sub pœna perjurii, in ipsum vel ipsos subire nolentes quam cito poterit infligere teneatur Cancellarius sine mora.

In this chest shall be kept all the jewels belonging to the University, and all monies paid to the University, except bequests or gifts, or payments which are made to the Chancellor and Proctors ex officio.

In eadem cista omnia jocalia Universitatis, aurea vel argentea, et omnes pecuniarum summæ ad dictam Universitatem qualitercunque proventuræ, præter ea quæ ex legatione vel dato pertinent seu pertinebunt officiis Cancellarii vel Procuratorum, et præter ea quæ ex voluntate donantium vel[1] legantium aliter fuerint conservanda, effectualiter reponantur.

The Proctors alone shall have charge of the underwritten :—

Ad custodiam vero Procuratorum de cætero, solummodo, sub pœna duplandi recepti, proveniant quæ sequuntur, videlicet centum solidi de redditu Universitatis annis singulis absque pluri[2] :—

1. One hundred shillings of the revenue of the University.

Item, redditus provenientes pro distributione Regentium, et pro pauperibus Scholaribus in die S. Nicholai depascendis, et pecuniæ a grammaticis recipi consuetæ :

2. Gifts for distribution among Masters and poor Scholars, on S. Nicholas' day, and the salary of the grammar Masters.

Item, communæ in licentiationibus et graduationibus proventuræ :

3. Fees paid at graduation, &c.

Item, duo nobilia de redditu Universitatis receptoribus[3] ejusdem redditus exsolvenda :

4. Two nobles to be paid to the receivers of the funds of the University.

[3] recentembiis, corrected by a late hand, C.

5. The value of forfeited weapons, &c.

Item, pretia armorum forisfactorum, et pecuniæ per appellationes levatæ seu levandæ.

Eight auditors of the accounts of this chest shall be appointed, four Doctors and four Masters of Arts, who shall swear that they will exact a strict account.

Pro computo vero dictæ cistæ quinque clavium audiendo eligantur octo auditores computi per scrutinium in congregatione Regentium, videlicet quatuor Doctores quatuor facultatum, et quatuor Magistri artium actualiter regentes, Australes et Borcales, qui jurabunt, tactis sacrosanctis evangeliis, quod strictam et justam auditionem facient, tantum quod justum est allocando omnibus et singulis qui coram ipsis computare tenentur temporibus in futuris, in quo scrutinio singuli Regentes simpliciter et sine dispositione aliqua scribere teneantur vota sua; et hujus scrutinii scrutatores erunt tres, junior Doctor in Theologia, junior Doctor Decretorum, et junior Magister artium regens.

At the election of these auditors, the Regents shall write down their votes, and the examiners of the votes shall be the junior Doctor in Theology, the junior Doctor in Decrees, and the junior Master of Arts.

Of the use of the seal of the University.[2]

Nothing shall be sealed with the common seal of the University except in full congregation during term, and in convocation during vacations; and everything so sealed shall have been first deliberated upon in congregation or convocation; and nothing which is deliberated upon in congregation shall be finally settled the same day.

Item, pro securiori custodia sigilli communis dictæ Universitatis, est per eandem congregationem Regentium et Non-regentium taliter ordinatum, quod nihil in posterum sigilletur sub sigillo communi Universitatis, nisi in plena congregatione Regentium, si plenus terminus fuerit, vel in convocatione Regentium et Non-regentium vacationum temporibus, nec quod aliquod scriptum sigillo prædicto sigilletur, nisi cujus tenor per spatium diei naturalis in plena congregatione Regentium, si plenus terminus fuerit, vel in convocatione Regentium et Non-regentium in tempore vacationis, prius mature pertractetur, nec quod aliqua deliberatio in congregatione Regentium primo die quo proponitur plenarie sit decisa, et quod ista ordinatio de sigillo communi, una cum ordinatione de cista quinque clavium, quoad omnes earumdem particulas ita stricte observetur, quod super his nullo modo fiat dispensatio nisi per congregationem Regentium et Non-regentium solemniter convocatam.

The provisions of these ordinances as to the seal and the chest of five keys shall never be dispensed with, except by congregation.

Of the change of dress in Summer.[1]

Item, cum dictat ratio varietates habituum temporum dispositionibus respondere, et festum Paschæ ex infallibili cursu propter[2] viciniam participat cum æstate, præfata congregatio Regentium et Non-regentium concorditer ordinavit, quod amodo liceat, a festo Paschæ usque festum Omnium Sanctorum, graduatis seu graduandis quibus hujusmodi congruunt, conferre vel uti sericis in suis habitibus, antiqua consuetudine non obstante.

It is reasonable that dress should be changed with the changes of the seasons; therefore, from Easter to All Saints' day, silk robes may be used.

Item, quia præconis officio congruit sibi commissa planius quo noverit intimare, et inter cætera linguarum eloquia Universitatibus, ubi confluunt nationes linguæ disparis, Latina maxime sit communis, statutum est, ut de cætero proclamationes singulæ Bedellorum, saltem inter Scholares habitæ, solum fiant in publico sub Latino.

People of various nations gather at Oxford: therefore the proclamations of the Bedels shall be made in Latin, that being the language most generally understood.

The regent Masters, who are willing to lecture in them, shall read the seven sciences and the three philosophies according to the following form:—

At the end of every term the Proctors shall ascertain who are willing so to lecture, and shall divide them into ten divisions as nearly equal in number as possible. In the first division shall be reckoned the junior Masters and the superintendents of the grammar schools. In the proviso insuper, quod uniuscujusque portionis quilibet Magister, unus post alium, illos solummodo libros pro forma inceptorum in artibus limitatos arti vel philosophiæ suæ portionis pertinentes, per se vel per alium Magistrum legat ordinarie, vices per æquales de eodem libro vel alio suæ scientiæ vel philosophiæ, prout Magistris illius portionis melius videbitur auditoribus expedire: observato insuper, quod in lectionibus suis ordinariis dictarum scientiarum Magistri quique[1] legentes primitus textum, prout jacet, legant; deinde ipsum, secundum exigentiam materiæ, plene et aperte exponant, et tunc, ipso debite ordinato seu constructo, ipsius textualia excerpant notabilia, demum quæstiones, si necesse sit, movendo solummodo literales, absque digressione a mente textus elongata, ita quod nullæ scientiæ prohibitæ doceantur, nec alicui alteri[2] facultati vel statutis Collegiorum quomodolibet præjudicetur.

And, in lecturing, first the Masters shall read the text in order; then they shall explain it as the matter may require; then they shall choose passages from it; and, lastly, they shall raise points for discussion, but only such as naturally arise from the text, so that no prohibited sciences be taught.

Regents may dispute in arts although there be no disputation in theology going on; but the disputation must be proclaimed by the Bedel, with mention of the thesis, at least one day before.

Item, statutum est, quod Regentes in facultate artium possunt disputare ordinarie in eadem facultate, licet non habeatur disputatio ordinaria in facultate sacræ theologiæ, dummodo aliud impedimentum rationabiliter non occurrat, quodque omnem hujusmodi disputationem facultatis artium, ad minus per diem ante, præcedat proclamatio per Bedellum[3] tituli quæstionis vel problematis disputandi, si nullus casus inopinatus impedierit, qui casus licet interveniat, propter omissionem talis proclamationis non minus liceat disputare.

For the honour of our Lord Jesus Christ and of holy Mother Church, there shall be preached by a Doctor or Bachelor of Theology a public sermon every Sunday during full term, from the feast of S. Denys to that of the translation of S. Thomas of Canterbury, in the church of S. Mary the Virgin at Oxford, before noon, in the presence of the Chancellor and the University, except on the days when the University masses are celebrated, and on certain other festivals herein specified.

The preacher shall have two months' notice beforehand;

if unable to preach, he shall provide a substitute; and, if no such substitute can be found, there shall be no sermon for that time;

if his inability arise from his not having received due notice, then those whose duty it was to give such notice shall be bound to preach instead of him.

This money shall be placed in the new University chest, which shall be called "the Chichele chest" for ever, and shall be lent to the Masters and Scholars under the conditions herein-after specified.

For the safe custody of the money three guardians of the chest shall be elected, discreet and trusty Masters of Arts, two Regents and one Non-regent, every year, on the eve of the conception of the Blessed Virgin.

They shall be empowered to lend the said money, or the interest thereof, on receiving sufficient pledges for the same; and before entering upon their duties they shall swear that they will faithfully observe all the ordinances relating to this

No guardian shall hold office longer than a year and a month.

On surrendering their office, the guardians shall give an account of the funds of the chest, both principal and interest, and also of the pledges deposited; and if any of them have appointed a deputy, the deputy shall be responsible in the same way as his principal.

No one may act as deputy for a guardian unless he be a Master or Bachelor sworn to the University.

The outgoing guardians may not lend any money from the chest, nor alter the date of any pledge deposited, nor permit the renewal of any caution; but they may receive debts due to the chest, and deliver pledges from it.

The University may borrow, for its corporate use, one hundred shillings, and any College five marks, except the College of S. Mary of Winchester.

Any Regent or Non-regent, actually reading at Oxford, may borrow, for his own use, forty shillings, and no more.

Item, quod quilibet Magister regens vel non-regens studens in Universitate, de eodem mutuari possit, ad usum proprium, et non alterius, quadraginta solidos, et non plus pro una vice.

Any licentiate may borrow for his own use, two marks and half; a Bachelor, who has completed his studies in any faculty, two marks; and any other Bachelor, twenty shillings;

Item, quilibet licentiatus in aliqua facultate mutuari potest, ad usum proprium, et non alterius, solum duas marcas et dimidiam pro una vice; et Bachilarius, qui in aliqua facultate formam complevit legendi, mutuari potest,[1] ad suum usum et non alterius, solum duas marcas pro una vice; necnon quilibet Bachilarius alius viginti solidos, et quilibet Scholaris unam marcam, et non[2] ultra quovis quæsito colore, per se vel per alium, pro illa vice mutuari possunt[3] cista de prædicta; nec quivis prædictorum mutuantium iterum de eadem, per se vel per alium, quidquam mutuo recipere debet, donec de priore mutuo plene fuerit satisfactum et executum, post medietatem anni tantumdem de eadem cista mutuo recipere potest, et deinceps, absque fraude et malo ingenio, quantum opus habet; hoc diligentius observato, quod nulli communitati vel personæ, nec alicui prædictarum, præstetur mutuum de sorte prædictæ cistæ vel ejus excrescentiis quoquo modo, nec etiam alicui ipsarum, nisi sub reali et sufficienti pignore, pecuniam sic mutuandam in valore notabili excedente; quod quidem pignus, nisi infra mensem post suam superannuationem, si plenus terminus fuerit, vel infra primum mensem proximi termini, si vacatio fuerit, debite luatur, statim, proclamatione publica præcedente, venditioni publicæ exponatur, ita quod, cum pignus venditum fuerit, retenta cistæ summa proprii mutui, residuum pretii, si quid[4] fuerit, impignoranti solvatur.[5]

The variations are so very numerous, and at the same time so unimportant, that I have thought it unadvisable to collate the several copies, and have preferred, in the case of this statute only, to reprint a portion of the set of statutes, which has been already printed in another set in a previous part of this volume [see pp. 304 and 314]; unless this had been done either one or the other set of statutes must have been presented in an incomplete form, and with a multitude of useless various readings.—Ed.

Ordinatum est insuper, quod nullus pro aliqua transgressione citatus, aut quovis alio modo vocatus, venire præsumat ad dominum Cancellarium vel ejus Commissarium, qui pro tempore fuerit, ex quocunque colore, majori numero quam se tertio, sub eisdem pœnis, personis contravenientibus, secundum eandem distinctionem personarum præmissam, non immerito infligendis, nisi aliter dominus Cancellarius vel ejus Commissarius sic citatum vel vocatum ex aliqua causa legitima venire mandaverit.

and no one shall on any occasion venture to appear before the Chancellor, when cited or otherwise, with more than two companions, under pain of the before mentioned penalties; and the names of the delinquents, together with the particulars of their offence, shall be entered in the register of the Chancellor and Proctors;

Item, ordinatum est, quod nomina singulorum delinquentium in aliquo præmissorum, una cum numero et modis transgressionum suarum ac quoties deliquerint, in registro Cancellarii vel Procuratorum registrentur.

Of the Pseudo-Scholars or "Chamberdekyns."

C. 109.

The peace of the University is disturbed by persons who, having the appearance of Scholars, dwell in no hall, but lurk about the town in taverns and brothels, and commit murders and thefts, therefore it is ordered, that all Scholars must reside in some college or hall, under pain of imprisonment for the first offence, and banishment on refusal to do so on being warned;

Item, quum pax hujus[1] almæ Universitatis frequenter turbari dignoscitur per diversos, qui in forma Scholarium infra Universitatem et præcinctum ejusdem extra aulas ac sine Principalibus in locis diversis latent et expectant, qui nefando nomine "Chamberdekenys" nuncupantur, et per dies dormiunt ac in noctibus circa tabernas [et] lupanaria spolia homicidiaque vigilant, ideo statuit Universitas prædicta, quod[2] singuli Scholares Universitatis in aula vel collegio Universitatis ubi communæ ponuntur, sive in aulis eisdem annexis ac cum eisdem communas ponentibus sive batellantibus, commorentur, sub pœna carceris ipsis pro prima vice infligenda; quod si per dominum Cancellarium ejusve Commissarium, aut per Procuratores moniti ut ad loca prædicta sese transferant et hoc neglexerint, ab Universitate prædicta per bannitionem ut membra putrida infra octo dies abscidantur.

and no townsman shall, without special leave from the Chancellor, permit any Scholar to dwell in his house, under pain of a fine graduated at the discretion of the Chancellor, and of banishment for a fifth offence of this kind;

Item, ordinatum est, quod nullus villanus aliquem Universitatis Scholarem in domum suam ad inhabitandum sive ad communas ponendum quovis colore recipiat, nisi ex causa rationabili per Cancellarium ejusve Commissarium approbanda. Si quis vero in prædictis culpabilis reperiatur, pro prima vice duos solidos, pro secunda quatuor solidos, pro tertia vice sex solidos octo denarios, et sic aggravando pœnam juxta discretionem domini Cancellarii vel ejus Commissarii, Universitati solvere tencatur; et si quinta vice quis in

Item, ordinatum est, quod singulis annis dominus Cancellarius vel ejus Commissarius una cum Procuratoribus, in sua visitatione et supervisione, de observatione horum statutorum specialem faciant Scholaribus injunctionem, sub pœna[1] amissionis privilegiorum Universitatis eisdem Scholaribus infligenda, quousque paruerint cum effectu, [et] quod habebunt[2] singula loca prædicta veram formam hujus ordinationis in aliquo loco publico expositam, quatenus Scholares per hujus statuti ignorantiam nullatenus excusentur. and every year the Chancellor and Proctors, when they make their visitation, shall specially enjoin upon the Scholars observance of this statute, and copies of this statute shall be placed in the above-mentioned places of resort.

Memorandum, quod primo die Julii, anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo tricesimo tertio, existente Cancellario Magistro Gilberto Kymer, et Procuratoribus Magistris Wilhelmo Dawson[3] et Rogero Bulkley, in congregatione Regentium solemni, per sex Magistros artium regentes, scilicet quatuor Magistros artium ad intrinsecam electionem inferioris bedelli utriusque juris a duobus primis stantibus nominatos, et per duos Procuratores, electus fuit quidam Johannes Came in officium prædictum, rite et legitime secundum exigentiam statutorum Universitatis; doctores tamen quatuor facul-

When a certain John Came was elected Bedel in the usual manner, it happened that the doctors of the four faculties, with the Chancellor, had nominated another person, Benedict Stokes; and they maintained that, being the senior part of the University, and representing the majority of the faculties, their

Procuratores tamen prædicti, videntes hujusmodi allegationem sonare ad enervationem libertatum facultatis prædictæ manifestam, nomine suæ facultatis petierunt dictum Johannem Came, tanquam veraciter secundum formam statutorum Universitatis prædictæ electum, ut ipsum in quem major pars eligentium consenserat, ad dictum officium admitti, et in signum possessionis ejusdem officii baculum sibi tradi, ac, sub pœna statutorum, dictum Cancellarium id facere requisiverunt instanter, ac eidem Johanni juramentum dicto officio debitum et consuetum ibidem tradiderunt, dictusque Cancellarius, licet multum renitens, dicto Johanni ad hujusmodi requisitionem baculum tradidit, sub protestatione tamen quod, si illa electio judicaretur invalida, non intendebat quod ratione illius traditionis aliquod jus sibi acquireretur; sicque dictus Johannes, per duos Procuratores et quatuor Magistros artium debite electus, ipsum Cancellarium cum baculo officii prædicti debitis loco et tempore anteecedebat ut[1] debuit: quidam tamen venerabilis vir, Magister Ricardus Cauntone, legum doctor, ab ipso facto congregationis, nomine suo et omnium sibi adhærere volentium, coram altero Procuratorum prædictorum appellavit et cautionem præstitit: insuper et dictus Benedictus Stokes, asserens se per dictas quatuor facultates una but the Proctors, perceiving that a blow was hereby aimed at the supremacy of the faculty of arts, demanded that John Came, as being elected by a numerical majority of the Masters, should be admitted to the office of Bedel;

Hereupon a certain Master Richard Cauntone, doctor of laws, entered an appeal and deposited his caution;

as did also the said Benedict Stokes:

cum Cancellario prædicto ritc et legitime fore electum, similiter appellavit cautionemque suam eidem Procuratori tradidit; postea vero, scilicet quarto die prædicti mensis Julii, dictus Magister Ricardus Cauntone, una cum omnibus doctoribus sibi adhærentibus, ac dictus Benedictus Stokes, appellationibus suis prædictis sic frivole factis, renunciaverunt, cautionesque suas prædictas Universitati perdiderunt, sicque dictus Johannes Came, virtute electionis prædictæ, per dictos Procuratores et quatuor Magistros artium, ut præfertur, factæ, ipsum officium rite et legitime, quiete et in pace, occupavit et possedit.

but three days afterwards both of them renounced their appeal as frivolous, and forfeited their cautions; and so it came to pass that John Came, as elected by a numerical majority of Masters, entered upon and discharged the duties of his office unmolested.

Præterea sexto die dicti mensis Julii relatum erat Procuratoribus prædictis, quod quidam doctor juris in ordinario[1] suo suis retulisset Scholaribus quod dicta electio non fuisset valida, nisi aliquis doctor eidem consensisset, sicque lis mota erat inter Regentes super intellectu illius statuti, in quo cavetur quod ille, in quem major pars consentit, ad tale officium admittatur. Dicti Procuratores, prout ex officio suo tenebantur, pro tali lite sedanda[2] congregationem solemnem Regentium in crastino posuerunt, ut decreto ipsius congregationis finaliter staretur in perpetuum, quæ quidem congregatio per omnes doctores cujuslibet facultatis ibidem præsentes ac singulos Regentes facultatis artium unanimiter decrevit, quod isti termini "major pars" intelligantur de majori parte numerali, scilicet personarum eligentium et non facultatum, sicque dicta lis pro perpetuo sedata[3] fuerat et sopita inter eosdem.

Two days after this, the Proctors were informed that a certain doctor had told his Scholars that the aforesaid election would not have been valid, unless a doctor had voted for the successful candidate: upon this they called a congregation to set the matter at rest for ever; and this congregation determined that the word "majority" meant a numerical majority; and so the dispute ended.

B. 63. OF THE LIBRARY OF HUMFREY, DUKE OF GLOUCESTER.

A.D. 1439.

To ensure the safe custody of the one hundred and twenty-nine volumes lately munificently given to the University by Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester, and of all books hereafter to be given, it is hereby ordered that, a list of them shall be kept in "the chest of five keys," and in the Statute-books; and at the beginning of each such volume all the names of the books shall be written, and in each book the contents of such book, and also the first word of the second folio thereof, so that any loss may be at once detected;

and that the Chaplain of the University, in the customary prayers offered every year in every school for benefactors, shall remember him by name,

Insuper promittimus, quod quilibet Universitatis nostræ graduatus amodo prædicaturus, in suffragiis consuetis suorum solemnium sermonum, sui auditorii populum ad devote supplicandum pro eodem patre ac domino Domino Henrico Cardinali sæpedicto ita specialiter, sicut pro aliquo nostræ dictæ Universitatis benefactore, publice in perpetuum exhortabitur. Ceterum benignissimos et præclaros dominos antedictos ac alios cum eis præfati reverendissimi patris et domini Domini Henrici Cardinalis testamenti executores, propter eorum beneficentiam nobis, ut prædicitur, pie, liberaliter, et generose ostensam, inter præcipuos nostræ Universitatis benefactores admittimus, eisdem concedentes quod omnium suffragiorum piorum et bonorum operum quorumcunque, quæ pro benefactoribus prædictæ Universitatis in posterum fient, semper participes habebuntur. Unde, ut hæc omnia et singula præmissa per nos concessa a nobis et successoribus nostris inviolabiliter in perpetuum observentur, in forma præmissa auctoritate congregationis Regentium et Non-regentium nostræ Universitatis ordinavimus et conclusimus, quod prædictæ nostræ concessionis tenor de verbo in verbum in registris et archivis nostris scribetur et perpetuo remanebit, et ut statutum et pro statuto dictæ Universitatis nostræ infringibiliter in æternum observabitur.

And every graduate shall, before his sermon, ask the prayers of his auditory for the said Cardinal; and moreover, the executors above-named shall be admitted to all the honours of benefactors;

and this ordinance shall be copied into the registers of the University, and shall become a statute thereof to be observed for ever.

In quorum omnium et singulorum fidem et testimonium has literas nostras indentatas et tripartitas fieri fecimus patentes, quarum duæ partes ad dispositionem executorum prædictorum, tertia[1] vero pars in archivis dictæ Universitatis perpetuo remanebunt, necnon sigillum commune Universitatis nostræ prædictæ præsentibus apposuimus.

B. 96. ORDINATIO CISTÆ DE DANVERS.

A.D. 1457. Universis sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ filiis, ad quos præsentes literæ pervenerint, Thomas Chaundelere, sacræ theologiæ professor, Cancellariusque Universitatis Oxoniæ, necnon et cœtus unanimis Magistrorum regentium et non-regentium in eadem, salutem in omnium Salvatore.

Dame Joan Danvers, widow of William Danvers, esquire, feeling that one of the greatest acts of charity is the providing for the relief of the necessities of poor Scholars, has given to the University the sum of one hundred pounds.

Inter cetera pietatis opera primum esse dignoscitur studentium necessitati consulere, etiam compassionis et misericordiæ oculos ad eorum relevandas indigentias convertere, ipsis de opportuno subsidio providendo. When a pledge is going to be sold, no one shall be allowed to borrow it for inspection, unless he make oath that he does not borrow it in order to prevent the sale thereof;

Item, quod nullum pignus de cista prædicta venditioni expositum, sive voluntate pignorantis infra annum, sive per custodes cistæ post annum, cuiquam ad examinationem vel inspectionem tradatur, nisi corporale præstiterit juramentum, quod pignus hujusmodi non accipit fraudulenter [2] ad impediendum vel differendum venditionem illius: et ad juramenta hujusmodi exigenda quilibet custos, etiam et ille in cujus manus hujusmodi cautio venalis traditur, firmissime [3] astringantur.

Item, quod in præfata cista sit registrum, in quo, annis singulis instante computo per custodes computum reddituros, scribantur singillatim nomina eorum quibus debebuntur excrescentiæ de pignoribus venditis anno illo, videlicet post ultimum computum præcedentem, una cum summis excrescentiarum debitarum singulis eorumdem; quæ scriptura per auditores computi examinetur, ut concordet cum summa novarum excrescentiarum inserenda indenturæ super illum computum faciendæ; ne quis, cujus[1] pignus ultra summam mutui per ipsum de cista accepti, venditum forsan fuerit, per custodum cistæ injuriam seu negligentiam, debitis sibi excrescentiis defraudetur. after satisfying these claims the list shall be cancelled, but not so as to render it illegible, so that the next auditors may be able to consult it, and not be called upon to discharge a debt a second time.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, Johannes Dei gratia Lincolniæ Episcopus, Cancellarius Universitatis Oxoniæ, ac ejusdem Universitatis Magistrorum regentium et non-regentium congregatio, æternam in Domino salutem.

Cum venerabilis vir, Magister Ricardus Lichfeld,[1] legum doctor, Archidiaconus Middlesexiæ et Bathoniæ, nobis ac Universitati nostræ prædictæ [ducentas libras][2] ad reædificationem ecclesiæ Beatæ Mariæ infra Universitatem nostram, ubi variis gradibus insignimur, ac centum [viginti et octo][3] volumina communi librariæ Universitatis nostræ de sua liberalitate contulerit, cupientes tanto viro pro temporalibus beneficiis spiritualia dona rependere, concedimus eidem Magistro Ricardo ea quæ sequuntur perpetuis temporibus duratura.

Master Richard Lichfeld, doctor of laws, &c., having given to the University the sum of [two hundred pounds] for the restoration of their church of the Blessed Virgin, and also one hundred [and twenty-eight] volumes to their library, they, as some recompence for his generosity,

In primis concedimus, pro nobis et successoribus nostris, quod post obitum dicti[4] Magistri Ricardi, annis singulis in anniversario dominorum Johannis et Thomæ Kempe, idem Magister Ricardus habeat pro salute animæ suæ duas collectas solemnes in exequiis, ab executore officii solemniter lectas, scilicet "Deus (cui) proprium" minor in vesperiis, et, post laudes, "Omnipotens sempiterne Deus, cui nunquam sine spe misericordiæ," et cetera, et in missa sequenti pro eodem, "Deus cui proprium" minor, cum secretis et communione convenientibus.

grant that, on the anniversary of John and Thomas Kempe, special collects shall be said for him likewise;

Concedimus præterea eidem Magistro Ricardo, quod singuli graduati prædicaturi, in suis sermonibus solemnibus infra Universitatis præcinctum, ad crucem S. Pauli, seu Hospitale Beatæ Mariæ extra Bishoppis-

Of the Migration of Scholars from one Hall to another.

A.D. 1489.

Anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo octogesimo nono, quinto die Martii, existente Cancellario venerabili in Christo patre ac domino Domino Johanne Russell, Lincolniensi Episcopi, et Procuratoribus Magistris Willielmo Hewster et Roberto Burtone, in congregatione magna Regentium et Non-regentium, celebrata in ecclesia Gloriosæ Virginis, editum est subsequens statutum, unanimi consensu omnium facultatum tunc ibidem existentium, et ad perpetuam rei memoriam in formam statuti est redactum.[1]

The statutes relating to halls that have hitherto been made, or hereafter shall be made by the University shall be read by every Principal to his Scholars assembled, and by him explained to them, thrice a year, and at other times as occasion shall require;

Ordinationes et statuta per dominos Cancellarios hujus almæ Universitatis, ex discreto et maturo advisamento ac consensu venerabilis cœtus Magistrorum ac Principalium aularum, transactis temporibus edita, et in posterum edenda, ac ea præsertim de quibus infra fit mentio, et quæ, tam tempore domini Gilberti Kymer, quam tempore reverendi patris Johannis Russell, Lincolniensis Episcopi, præfatæ Universitatis Can-

Et, quia jam, ab aliquot annis effluxis, inobedientia Scholarium erga suos Principales potissimam causam dedisse videtur quare ipsa statuta aularia non observantur, cum illi, non expectata pœna expulsionis, ad alias aulas, ubi favorabiliter receptantur, se quadam spontanea protervitate divertere consueverunt, in dispendium Principalium aularum hujusmodi a quibus recedunt, super quo non est hucusque per antiqua statuta ullo modo provisum; Idcirco, præfatis antiquioribus statutis aularibus addendo, decretum et ordinatum est, imprimis, per dictum reverendum patrem Lincolniæ Episcopum, hujus Universitatis Cancellarium, de advisamento et consensu prædictis, quod de cetero neque licebit alicui Scholari Universitatis se sua sponte de una aula in aliam transferre, neque alicui Principali talem recedentem ab una aula in suam admittere, Principali aulæ a qua discedere cupit non consentiente, nisi causa recessus et transitus sui hujusmodi per Cancellarium Universitatis qui pro tempore fuerit, vocato et audito Principali aulæ a qua discedere cupit, fuerit prius[1] approbata. And, whereas the Scholars have for a long time been disobedient to their Principals, because at their pleasure they have been able to remove from one hall to another, and so to elude sentence of expulsion;

therefore it is hereby ordered, that no Scholar shall at his pleasure migrate to another hall, and no Principal shall receive a Scholar from another hall without the consent of his Principal, and without the reason of his migration having been known and approved by the Chancellor; and any Principal offending against this regulation shall be subject to the same penalty as if he had received an expelled Scholar.

Aliud statutum in eadem congregatione Magistrorum.[3]

Such is the audacity of Scholars in these days, that they fear not to wear the hoods in the fashion of Masters, wherefore it is enacted that, no Scholar, except those privileged to do so, shall use any hood in the University, except it have the tails sewn on.

Cum multorum Scholarium insolentia in tantam nostris diebus prorumpat audaciam, ut non vereantur in modum Magistrorum capitiis uti, volentes arrogantiam istam rescindere, statuimus, ut nullus de cetero Scholaris non-graduatus, nobili sanguine insignitis, et promotis in Ecclesia Christi aliquo beneficio speciali, vel patrimonio temporali decoratis tantummodo exceptis, capitio quovis utatur publice in Universitate nostra, vel infra præcinctum ejusdem, nisi liripipium consutum ha-

Of the Time and Manner of the Election of the Bedels.

A.D. 1492.

Anno millesimo quadringentesimo nonagesimo secundo, octodecimo die mensis Maii, existente Cancellario venerabili in Christo patre ac domino Domino Johanne Russell, Lincolniæ Episcopo, Procuratoribus Magistris Johanne Davys et Wilhelmo Lampton, in congregatione magna Regentium et Non-regentium, celebrata in ecclesia Beatæ Mariæ Virginis, editum est subsequens statutum, magnaque facultate ibidem tunc præsente conferente assensum.

Omnibus Christi fidelibus, ad quos præsens scriptum pervenerit, Johannes Dei gratia Lincolniensis Episcopus, Cancellarius Universitatis Oxoniensis, ejusdem Procuratores, ac venerabilis Magistrorum regentium et non-regentium percelebris congregatio, æternam in Domino salutem.

To settle disputes about the time of the elections of the Bedels, it is declared, that they shall be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the Chancellor, and that the three proclamations, which are ordered to precede such election, shall be made within eight reading days after the vacancy, which is to be filled up, occurs.

Quia olim inter Magistros regentes lis videbatur orta ex hoc, quod electionis servientium tempus ex statutis Universitatis evidenter non apparet, propter ea statuimus et decernimus, quod ubi cavetur in statuto de electione[1] servientium quod, "simili modo procedendum est ad electionem servientium quo ad Cancellarii electionem proceditur," sic intelligatur, quod, post trinam proclamationem factam, statim et immediate procedatur ad electionem servientium, ponendo paritatem tum modi tum temporis eligendi; quam trinam proclamationem ordinamus et statuimus complendam atque finiendam[2] infra octo dies legibiles in pleno ter-

Of the Duties of the Grammar Masters.

Et quia Magistri scholarum apud fratres Augustinenses, in disputationibus ibidem habitis, sine mercede graves sustinent labores, Magistri autem grammaticæ sine laboribus ad onus Universitatis salaria percipiunt, ideo statuimus et ordinamus, quod ipsa summa data Magistris grammaticæ convertatur ad usum Magistrorum scholarum apud fratres Augustinenses, tum quod dicti Magistri non solum Magistri scholarum apud fratres Augustinenses sint et censeantur sed etiam grammaticæ, et quod alter eorum vel ejus deputatus intersit singulis disputationibus in ipsis scholis apud dictos fratres Augustinenses solitis, sub pœna duorum denariorum toties quoties de stipendio eorum deficientium defalcandorum, et Universitati in computo Procuratorum, qui pro tempore fuerint, solvendorum.

The Masters of the schools at "the Augustines" work hard and receive no salary, whereas the grammar Masters receive payment for no work, wherefore it is ordered that the salary of the latter shall be given to the former, and they shall be the grammar Masters as well as Masters at "the Augustines."

A petition for the removal of Master Robert Smythe from the office of Commissary. C. 127.

Anno Domini millesimo quadringentesimo nonagesimo quinto, quinto decimo die Februarii, existente Cancellario reverendo in Christo patre ac domino, Domino Johanne Morton, presbytero Cardinali, Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi, totius Anglie Cancellario, et Procuratoribus Magistris Wilhelmo Hasard et Wilhelmo Masbill, in magna congregatione Regentium et Non-regentium, in ecclesia Beate Marie legitime celebrata, consensu quatuor facultatum tunc in Universitate presentium nunc regentium, in maxima multitudine facultatis juris canonici, facultatis juris civilis, et facultatis artium, primo Magistrorum regentium, ea que sequuntur declarata sunt. A.D. 1495.

Imprimis, inter scelera atque delicta, per Magistrum Robertum Smythe, sacræ theologiæ professorem ac prædicti Cancellarii pro tempore Commissarium, commissa, prout in quodam articulo primum in nigra congregatione lecto, deinde in hac, solemni proposito latius patuit, declaratum est ac statutum, auctoritate prædicta, ob reverentias et honores tanto domino, cujus vices tunc gesserat, tribuendos, supplicationem sub forma quæ sequitur pro dicto Roberto ab officio amovendo mittendam.

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the present Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most "complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional "point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the "want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendation contained in the Reports of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and they further empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls :—

Calendarium Genealogicum; for the Reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. Edited by Charles Roberts, Esq., Secretary of the Public Record Office. 2 Vols. 1865.

This is a work of great value for elucidating the early history of our nobility and landed gentry.

Vol. III.—1591–1594.

The first, second, and third volumes are published, extending from 1547 to 1594.

Calendar of State Papers, Domestic Series, of the Reign of James I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by Mary Anne Everett Green. 1857–1859.

Vol. I.—1603–1610.
Vol. II.—1611–1618.
Vol. III.—1619–1623.
Vol. IV.—1623–1625, with Addenda.

Mrs. Everett Green has completed a Calendar of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I. in four volumes. The mass of historical matter thus rendered accessible to investigation is large and important. It throws new light on the Gunpowder-plot; the rise and fall of Somerset; the particulars connected with the Overbury murder; the disgrace of Sir Edward Coke; and other matters connected with the reign.

Vol. VII.—1634–1635.
Vol. VIII.—1635.
Vol. IX.—1635–1636.
Vol. X.—1636–1637.

This Calendar is in continuation of that of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I., and comprises the first thirteen years of the reign of Charles I., but is in active progress towards completion, and will extend to the Restoration of Charles II. It presents notices of a large number of original documents of great value to all inquirers into the history of the period to which it relates. Many of these documents have been hitherto unknown to men of letters.

Vol. I.—1509–1573. | Vol. II.—1574–1585.

Two volumes, of Irish State Papers, between 1509 and 1585, have been published under the editorship of Mr. Haus Claude Hamilton; and another volume is in progress.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL SERIES, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, and elsewhere. Edited by W. NOEL SAINSBURY, Esq. 1860–1862.

Vol. I.—America and West Indies, 1574–1660.

Vol. II.—East Indies, China, and Japan, 1513–1616.

The first volume of a Calendar of Colonial Papers relating to America and the West Indies, from 1574 to 1660, was published in 1860. The second volume, relating to the East Indies, China, and Japan, from 1513 to 1616, appeared in 1862. The above portion includes an analysis of all Papers from the three great archives of the Public Record Office, the India Office, and the British Museum. The third volume is in the press. The regular series of the East India Papers in the Public Record Office are calendared to the year 1623; those relating to the same subject in the Domestic Correspondence to 1625; and in the Foreign Correspondence to 1620; the Court Minutes of the East India Company to 1621, and the Original Correspondence in the India Office to 1620. Many undated Papers have been dated and arranged.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the British Museum, &c. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1862–1867.

Vol. I.—1509–1514.

Vol. II. (in Two Parts)—1515–1518.

Vol. III. (in Two Parts)—1519–1523.

These volumes contain summaries of all State Papers and correspondence relating to the reign of Henry VIII., in the Public Record Office, of those formerly in the State Paper Office, in the British Museum, the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge, aud other public Libraries; and of all letters that have appeared in print in the works of Burnet, Strype, and others. In short, whatever authentic original material exists in England relative to the religious, political, parliamentary, or social history of the country during the reign of Henry VIII., whether despatches of ambassadors, or proceedings of the army, navy, treasury, or ordnance, or records of Parliament, appointments of officers, grants from the Crown, &c., will be fouud calendared in these volumes.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF MARY, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

The two preceding volumes exhibit the negotiations of the English ambassadors with the courts of the Emperor Charles V. of Germany, of Henry II. of France, and of Philip II. of Spain. The affairs of several of the minor continental states here find various incidental illustrations of much interest.

A valuable series of Papers descriptive of the circumstances which attended the loss of Calais merits a special notice; while the progress of the wars in the north of France, into which England was dragged by her union with Spain, is narrated at some length. The domestic affairs of England are of course passed over in these volumes, which treat only of its relations with foreign powers.

Vol. IV.—1561–1562.
Vol. V.—1562.

These five volumes contain a descriptive catalogue of the foreign correspondence of Queen Elizabeth, from her accession in 1558, to 1562, of which the originals, drafts, or contemporary copies, are deposited in the Public Record Office. These documents are of the greatest value as exhibiting the position of England at one of the most interesting periods of history, in regard to its relations with France, Scotland, Spain, and Germany. They are of especial importance as illustrating not only the external but also the domestic affairs of France during the period which immediately preceded the outbreak of the first great war of religion under the Prince of Condé and the Duke of Guise.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. 1867–1868.

Vol. I.—1515–1574.
Vol. II.—1575–1588.

The Carew Papers relating to Ireland deposited in the Lambeth Library are not only unique in themselves, but are of great importance. Two volumes of the Calendar of these valuable Papers have already been published, extending from 1515 to 1588, which cannot fail to be welcome to all students of Irish history. Another volume is in the press.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPATCHES, AND STATE PAPERS, relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. 1862–1867.

Vol. I.—Hen. VII.—1485–1509.
Vol. II.—Hen. VIII.—1509–1525.

Mr. Bergenroth is engaged in compiling a Calendar of the Papers relating to England preserved in the archives of Simancas in Spain, and the corresponding portion removed from Simancas to Paris. It has been deemed essential to the completion of his work that Mr. Bergenroth should visit Madrid, and examine the Papers there, bearing on the reign of Henry VIII. The first volume contains the Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VII., and the second volume the Papers of the first portion of the reign of Henry VIII.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON BROWN, Esq. 1864–1867.

Vol. I.—1202–1509.
Vol. II.—1509–1519.

Of the Papers in the Venetian archives, Mr. Rawdon Brown has already published two volumes of his Calendar, extending from 1202 to 1519, and has made considerable progress in the third volume. Mr. Brown's researches have brought to light a number of important documents relating to the various periods of English history, and his contributions to our historical literature are of the most interesting and important character.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[Royal 8vo., half-bound. Price 10*s.* each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an "uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's "royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, "and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional know- "ledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He "would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His "wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the "ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever "expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 the plan above referred to for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

 John Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (for it is written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. Chronicon Monasterii de Abingdon. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

 This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house, and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, which are of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom at large. The work is now printed for the first time.

3. Lives of Edward the Confessor. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requieseit. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

 The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines. It is addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and was probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author.

 The second, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

 The third is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. Though it does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, yet it is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time.

4. Monumenta Franciscana; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

 This volume contains the original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical materials could be found in this country, in the British Museum, or elsewhere, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these works have been before printed.

5. Fasciculi Zizaniorum Magistri Johannis Wyclif cum Tritico. Ascribed to Thomas Netter, of Walden, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from the fact that it is the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. At the time when it was written, the disputes of the schoolmen had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries.

Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The "Fasciculi Zizaniorum" gives a good idea of the controversies which were carried on at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. The Buik of the Croniclis of Scotland ; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece ; by William Stewart. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. Turnbull, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this ; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true ; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed.

The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version of Boece's work, and the student of language will here find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. Johannis Capgrave Liber de Illustribus Henricis. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446 which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II , and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. Historia Monasterii S. Augustini Cantuariensis, by Thomas of Elmham, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by Charles Hardwick, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The author's name does not occur ; but the internal evidence in the Chronicle shows that he was a monk of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, and treasurer of that foundation. He was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. Eulogium (Historiarum sive Temporis) : Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366 ; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. Haydon, Esq., B.A. 1858–1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367 A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not at present known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books. It contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England down to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. Memorials of Henry the Seventh: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by James Gairdner, Esq. 1858.

The contents of these volumes are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Besides these, other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. Memorials of Henry the Fifth. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by Charles A. Cole, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works a reprinted for the first time in the present volume.

12. Munimenta Gildhallæ Londoniensis; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. This work gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the record room of the City of London, though some portion of it, in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, now forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. This work gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. Chronica Johannis de Oxenedes. Edited by Sir Henry Ellis, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for its notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A Collection of Political Poems and Songs relating to English History, from the Accession of Edward III. to the Reign of Henry VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1859–1861.

These poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are very various in character; some of them are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another.

The period comprised is in itself very interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to what may be considered the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable interest to the philologist.

15. The "Opus Tertium," "Opus Minus," &c., of Roger Bacon. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—which, up to this time, had never been printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon. The volume also contains a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologiæ."

16. Bartholomæi de Cotton, Monachi Norwicensis, Historia Anglicana. 449–1298. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. Brut y Tywysogion; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. J. Williams ab Ithel. 1860.

This work, which is also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, and begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events of the time. The period (1399 to 1413) required much elucidation; and the volume will materially contribute to that desirable end.

19. The Repressor of over much Blaming of the Clergy. By Reginald Pecock, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, was consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and it is against their general doctrines that the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has very great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward —persecution.

20. Annales Cambriæ. Edited by the Rev. J. Williams ab Ithel. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout, though brief, are valuable. These annals were probably written at St. David's, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. The Works of Giraldus Cambrensis. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Topographia Hibernica et Expugnatio Hibernica. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861–1868.

The first three volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use.

Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185–6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon.

The Expugnatio was written about the year 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of facts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

22. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Wars of the English in France during the Reign of Henry the Sixth, King of England. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impérial, and the Depôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, according to the several Original Authorities. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by Benjamin Thorpe, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In the present edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by James Gairdner, Esq. 1861–1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. Letters of Bishop Grosseteste, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and arranged in chronological order. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop. These Letters have not hitherto been collected, and the greater portion of them are now printed for the first time.

26. Descriptive Catalogue of Manuscripts relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066–1200. By Thomas Duffus Hardy, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862–1865.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages: the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. Royal and other Historical Letters illustrative of the Reign of Henry III. From the Originals in the Public Record Office. Vol. I., 1216–1235. Vol. II., 1236–1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862–1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly preserved in the Tower of London, and now deposited in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of these letters, more especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is now printed for the first time.

28. Chronica Monasterii S. Albani. — 1. Thomæ Walsingham Historia Anglicana; Vol. I., 1272–1381: Vol. II., 1381–1422. 2. Willelmi Rishanger Chronica et Annales, 1259–1307. 3. Johannis de Trokelowe et Henrici de Blaneforde Chronica et Annales, 1259–1296; 1307–1324; 1392–1406. 4. Gesta Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, a Thoma Walsingham, regnante Ricardo Secundo, ejusdem Ecclesiæ Præcentore, compilata; Vol. I., 793–1290: Vol. II., 1290–1349. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1867.

In the first two volumes is a history of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., written by Thomas Walsingham, precentor of St. Albans and prior of the Cell of Wymundham, belonging to that abbey. Walsingham's work is printed from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library, in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, from 1259 to 1306, attributed to William Rishanger, monk of Saint Albans, who lived in the reign of Edward I., printed from the Cottonian Manuscript, Faustina B. IX. (of the fourteenth century) in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219–231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cottonian Manuscript Claudius E. III., fols. 306–331: Also an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol by King Edward I., 1291–1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius, D. VI., attributed to William Rishanger above mentioned, but on no sufficient ground: A short Chronicle of English History, from 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A short Chronicle from 1297 to 1307, in the same volume, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with an addition of Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1299, 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1295 to 1300, from MS. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1285 to 1307, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also Annals of King Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henricus de Blaneforde, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also a full Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer of St. Albans, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge: and an account of the past benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the fifth volume begins a history of the abbots of St. Albans, from 793 to the close of the fourteenth century, compiled by Thomas Walsingham, præcentor of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum. This is continued in the sixth volume.

29. Chronicon Abbatiæ Eveshamensis, Auctoribus Dominico Priore Eveshamiæ et Thoma de Marleberge Abbate, a Fundatione ad Annum 1213, una cum Continuatione ad Annum 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is now for the first time printed.

30. Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ. Vol. I., 447–871. Edited by John E. B. Mayor, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863.

Of the compiler of this work, which is in four parts, very little is known. In the prologue he calls himself Richard, a monk of Westminster, and at the end of the first part, Richard of Cirencester, a monk of St. Peter's, Westminster. One volume only, containing the first three books, has at present been published, the remainder is in the press, and will shortly appear. There is a continuation of the work down to the year 1348, which in due time will also be printed.

31. Year Books of the Reign of Edward the First. Years 20–21, 30–31, and 32–33. Edited and translated by Alfred John Horwood, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1866.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. Narratives of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy, 1449–1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. Historia et Cartularium Monasterii S. Petri Gloucestriæ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. Hart, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Soeiété des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863–1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester.

The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introdueed. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. Alexandri Neckam de Naturis Rerum libri duo; with Neckam's Poem, De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century.

In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Baeon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither "ean nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities."

Neekam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws mueh light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth eentury.

The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrieal paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiae metre; and though there are in it many lines whieh violate classieal rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of seienee, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medieal faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon seholar for the illustrations they afford of the Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. Annales Monastici. Vol. I. :—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II. :—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III. :—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registrary of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in the different religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are seven in number, and the extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are now printed for the first time.

37. Magna Vita S. Hugonis Episcopi Lincolniensis. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and, being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs.

The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities he was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186; he died on the 16th of November 1200; and was canonized in 1220.

38. Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard the First. Vol. I. :—Itinerarium Peregrinorum et Gesta Regis Ricardi. Vol. II. :—Epistolæ Cantuarienses; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by William Stubbs, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes us of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The Letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. Recueil des Croniques et anchiennes Istoriès de la Grant Bretaigne a present nomme Engleterre, par Jehan de Waurin. From Albina to 688. Edited by William Hardy, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

40. A Collection of the Chronicles and ancient Histories of Great Britain, now called England, by John de Wavrin. From Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding.) Edited and translated by William Hardy, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of this work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy now in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

This work has also been translated into English.

41. Polychronicon Ranulphi Higden, with Trevisa's Translation. Vol. I. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1865.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion of the work is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land.

To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. Le Livere de Reis de Brittanie e Le Livere de Reis de Engletere. Edited by John Glover, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livere de Reis de Engletere." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. Chronica Monasterii de Melsa, ab Anno 1150 usque ad Annum 1406. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Edward Augustus Bond, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1867.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration.

Two volumes of the work are published. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. Matthæi Parisiensis Historia Anglorum, sive, ut vulgo dicitur, Historia Minor. Vols. I. and II. 1067–1245. Edited by Sir Frederic Madden, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris), which gives fuller details, and which has been called the 'Historia Major.' The chronicle now published, nevertheless, gives some information which is not to be found in the greater history.

45. Liber Monasterii de Hyda: a Chronicle and Chartulary of Hyde Abbey, Winchester, 455–1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by Edward Edwards, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources, which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from, writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. Chronicon Scotorum: a Chronicle of Irish Affairs, from the Earliest Times to 1135; with a Supplement, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by William Maunsell Hennessy, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are the invasions of foreigners and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, and written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. The Chronicle of Pierre de Langtoft, in French Verse, from the earliest Period to the Death of Edward I. Vol. I. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1866.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first of which is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars.

The language in which the chronicle is written is singularly corrupt, and is a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. The War of the Gaedhil with the Gaill, or, The Invasions of Ireland by the Danes and other Norsemen. Edited, with a Translation, by James Henthorn Todd, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April, 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses.

The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. Gesta Regis Henrici Secundi Benedicti Abbatis. The Chronicle of the Reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., 1169–1192; known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough. Vols. I. and II. Edited by William Stubbs, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This is a chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, and is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions which is of the first importance to the genuine student.

50. Munimenta Academica, or, Documents illustrative of Academical Life and Studies at Oxford (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Henry Anstey, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

The purpose of this work is to supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086; fac-simile of the part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861–1863) boards. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* to 1*l.* 1*s.* each part, according to size; or, bound in 2 vols., 18*l.*

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each accord-" ing to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor; the present possessor; how many hides were in the manor; how many ploughs were in demesne; how many homagers; how many villeins; how many cottars; how many serving men; how many free tenants; how many tenants in soccage; how much wood, meadow, and pasture; the number of mills and fish-ponds; what had been added or taken away from the place; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor; the present value; and how much each free-man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward; who then held it; its value in the time of the late king; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be " traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, " it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, " nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860 Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of the whole of the Domesday Survey, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., director of the ordnance survey at Southampton. The work was completed in 1863.

Part I., with translations and notes (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.), 1865.
Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.), 1866.
Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth), 1867.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey.
